

THE MASKED GUIDE.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, 98 WILLIAM STREET, NEW YORK. 1m'n News Co., 119 & 121 Nassau St., N.Y

ISSUED SEPTEMBER 1st, 1870.

Dime Dialogues, Number Nine.

BEADLE AND COMPANY have just added Dime Dialogues No. 9 to their School Book Series, embracing a new collection of choice original Colloquies, acting Dialogues, minor Dramas, etc. Among its contents are:

ADVERTISING FOR HELP. For a number of females. As per formed in the Woodward High School. Revised for this work by Prof. Henry St. John, AMERICA TO ENGLAND, GREETING. For two boys, with an episode for the whole school. By Dr. Louis Legrand.

THE OLD AND THE NEW. For four females and one male. By Miss Lucy A. Sharlette.

CHOICE OF TRADES. For twelve little boys. By Mary B. C. Glade. From "the School Festival,"

THE LAP DOG. For two females. By G. S. L. THE VICTIM. For four females and one male. By H. G.

Dwight,

THE DUELIST. For two boys. By G. S. L.,
THE TRUE PHILOSOPHY. For several females and two males. By Dr. Louis Legrand,

A Good Education. For two females. By G. S. L. THE LAW OF HUMAN KINDNESS. For two females, SPOILED CHILDREN. For a mixed school. By Miss Kate A. Peters, DIALOGUES FOR BOYS FROM SHAKSPEARE:

Brutus and Cassius, Coriolanus and Aufidious,

THE NEW SCHOLAR. For a number of girls. By Alta Grant

THE SELF MADE MAN. For three males,

THE MAY QUEEN (No. 2) . For a school. A fancy dress and musical piece, with costume and stage directions. Copied by permission from the "School Festival,"

MRS. McLackland's Economy. For four boys and three girls. By John R. Craigholm. From the same,

SHOULD WOMEN BE GIVEN THE BALLOT? A Debate. For several boys. By Prof. Charles G. West,

THE GAY YOUNG CLERK SONGSTER.

(BEADLE'S DIME SONG BOOK SERIES, NO. 26.)

Howard Paul's Character Songs,

Lydia Thompson Troupe Songs,

Bobby Newcomb's Comic Songs,

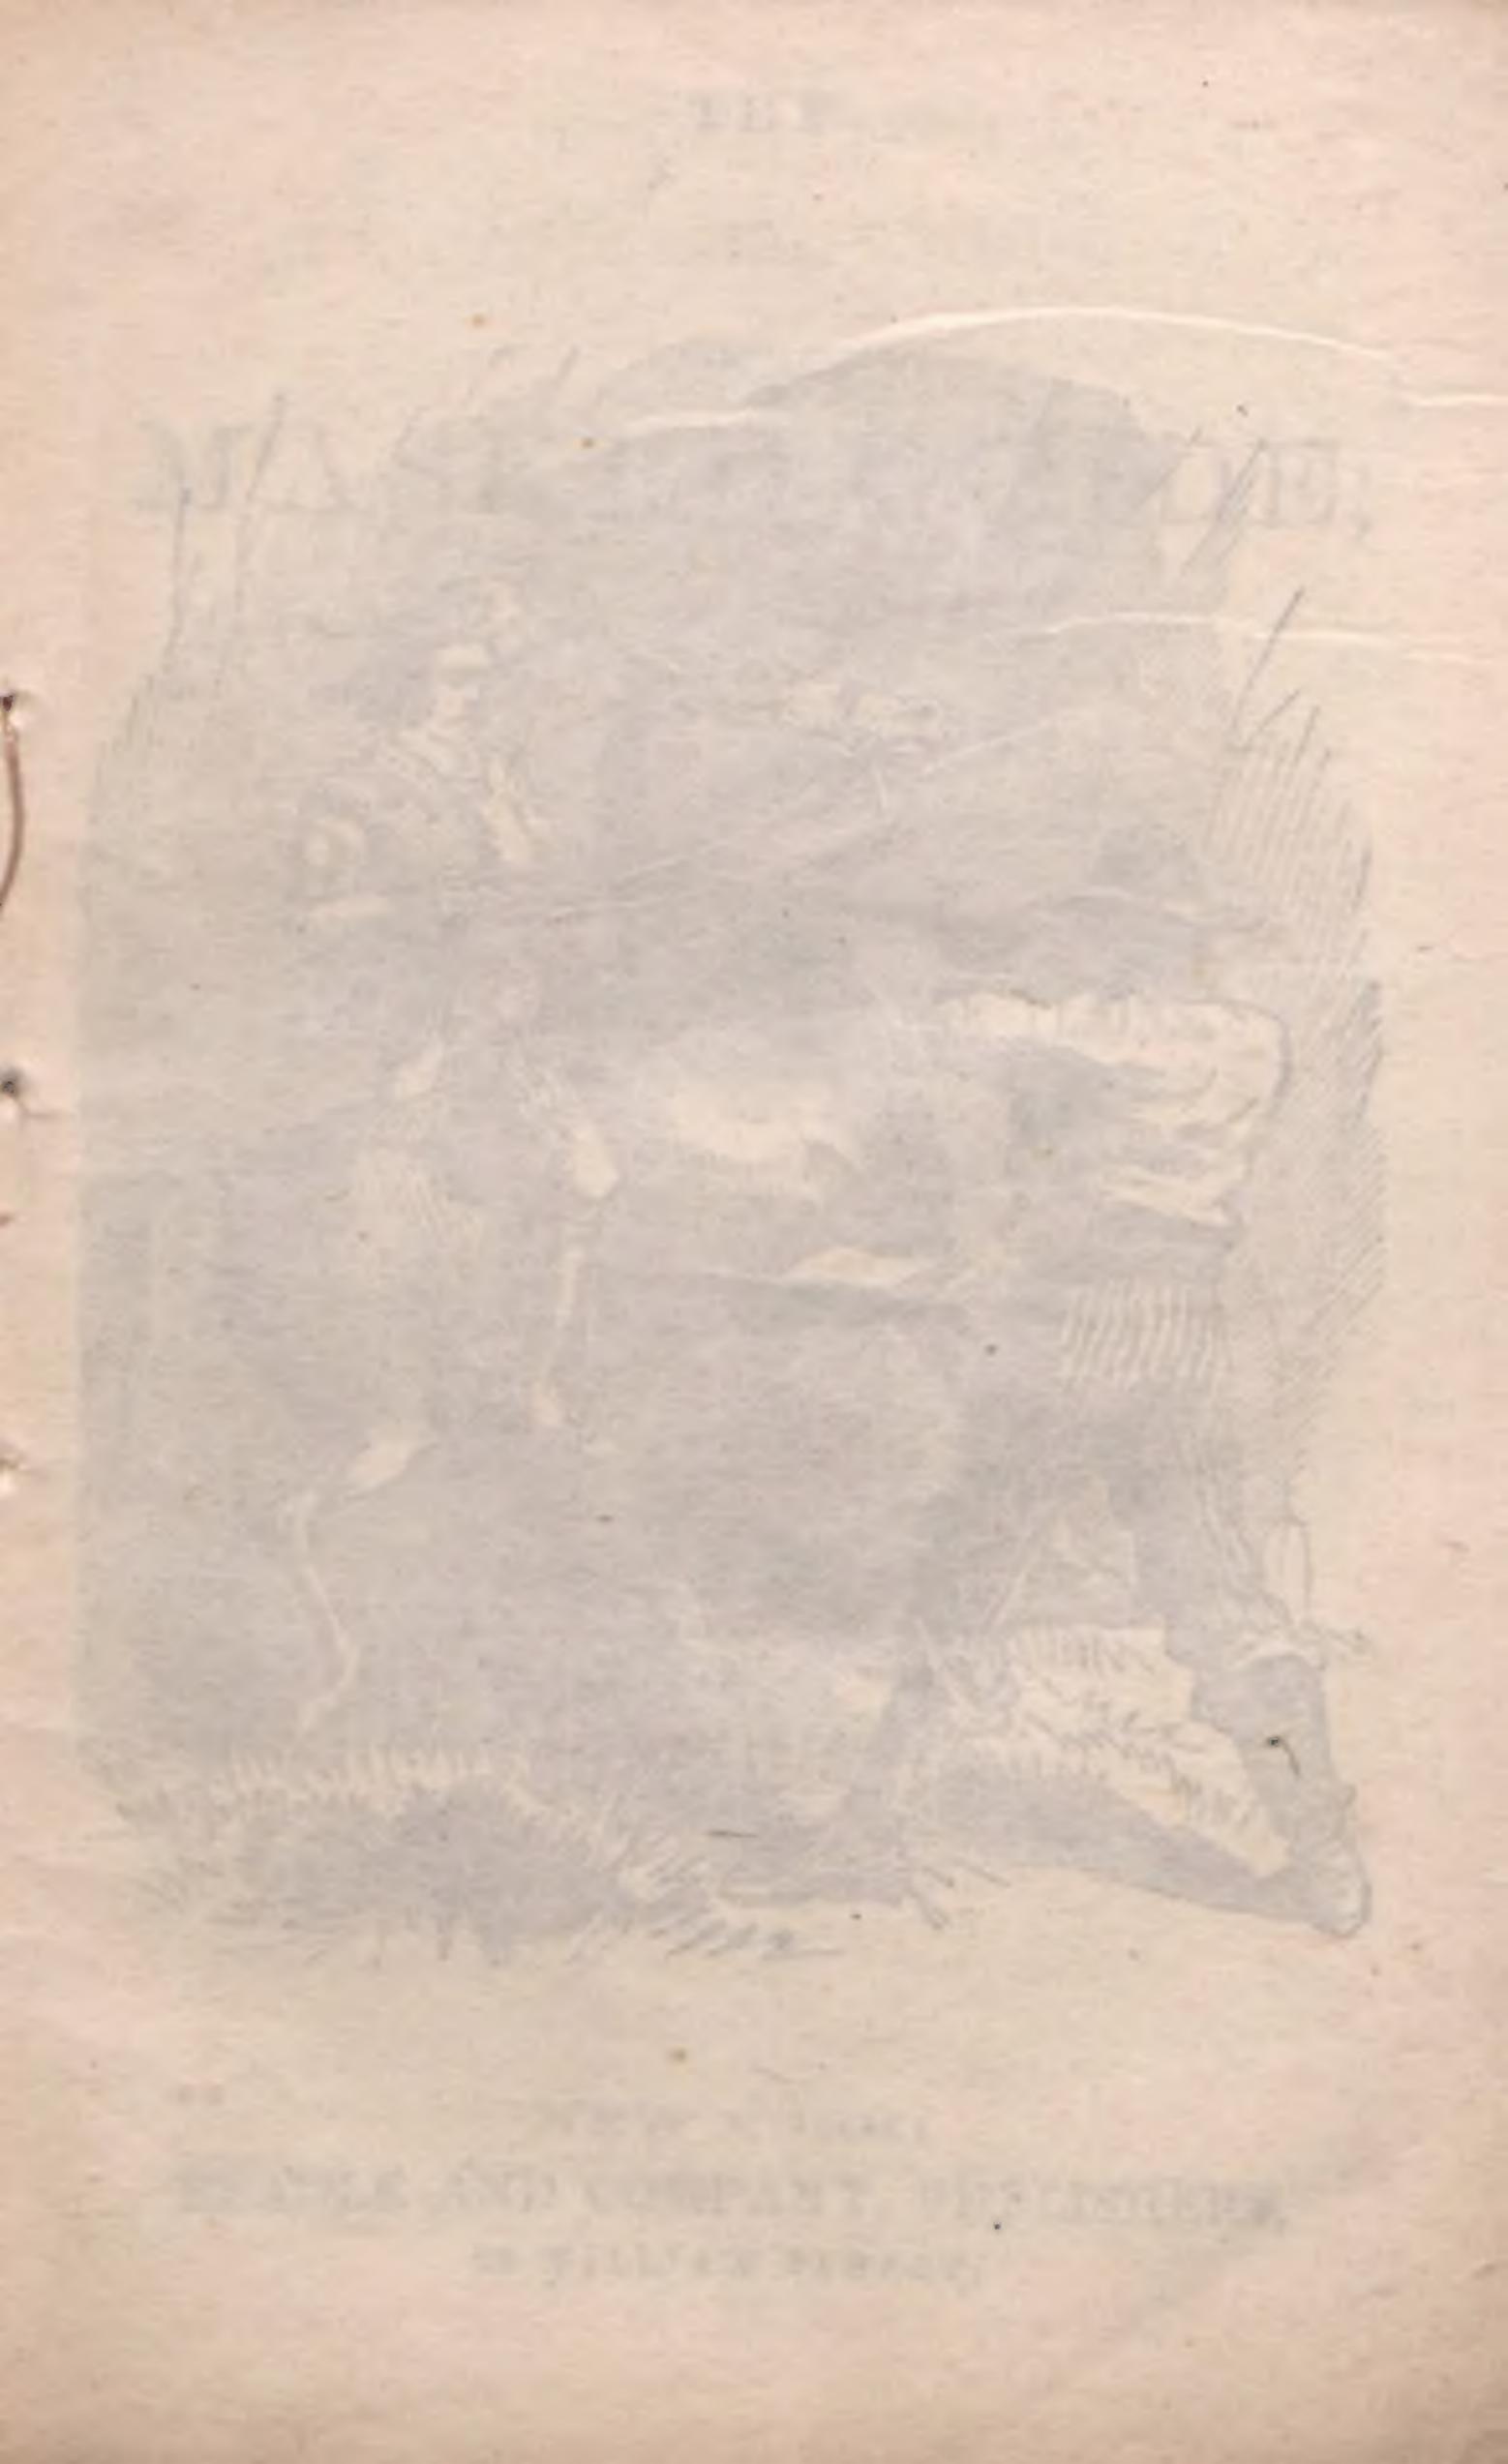

Tony Pastor's Songs, Etc., Etc.

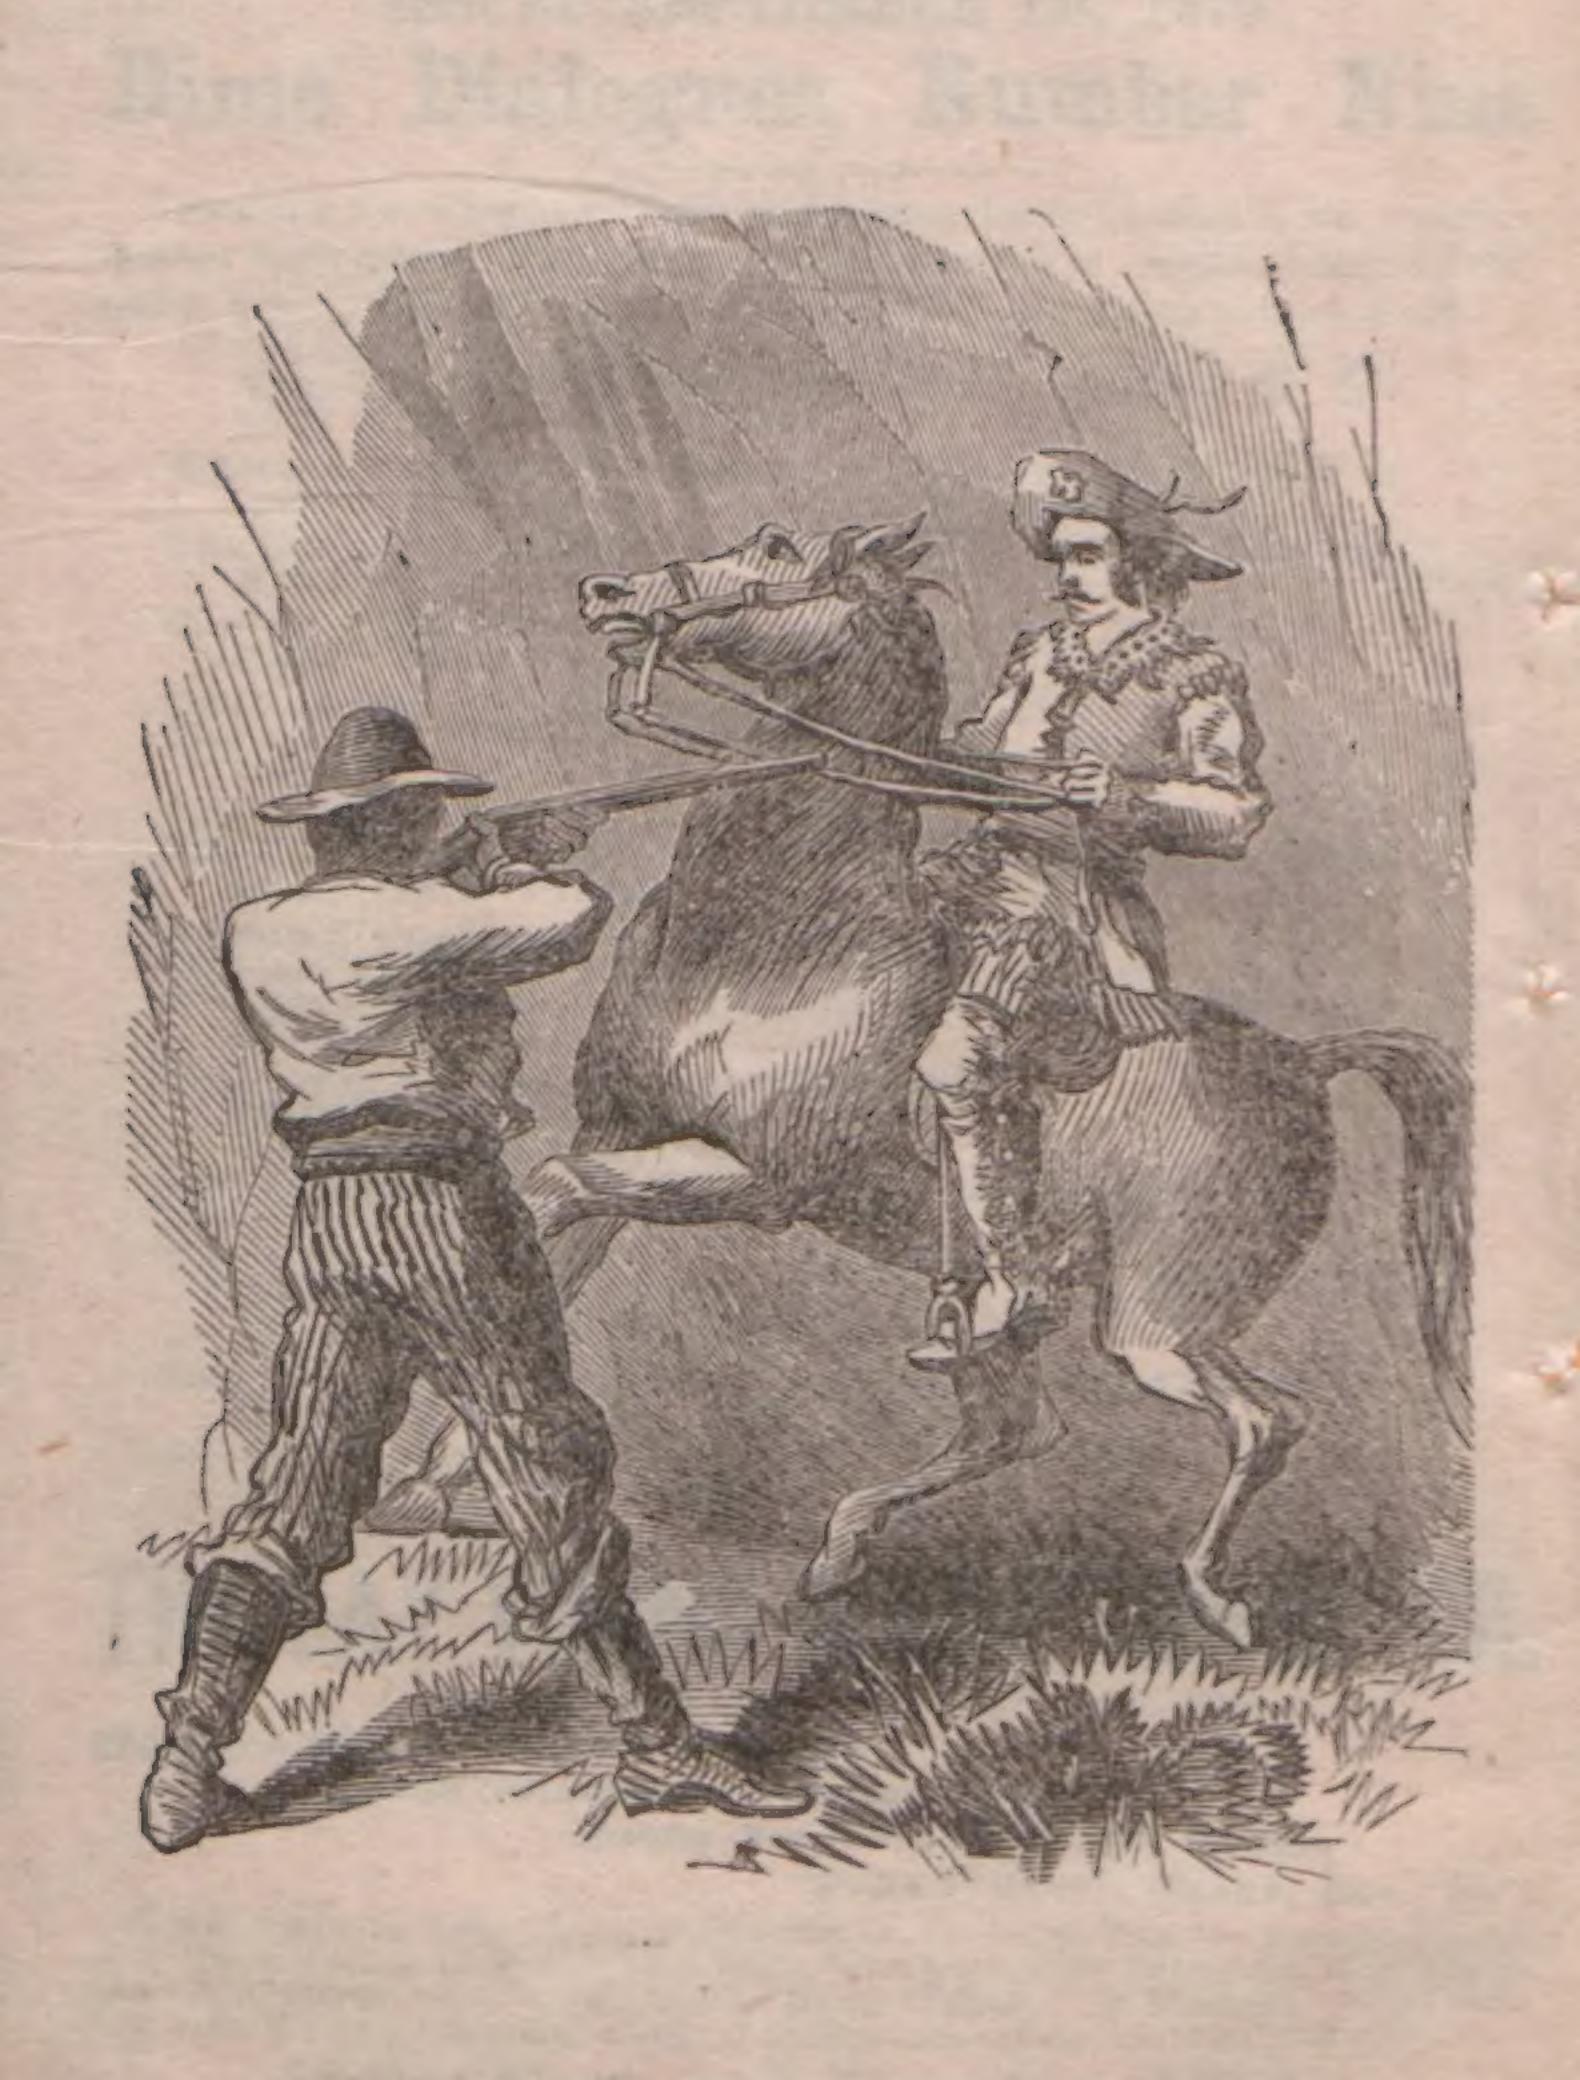

Comic, Pathetic, Sentimental and Burlesque, the latest from the favorite pens of J. R. Thomas, Geo. Cooper, Will S. Hays, Alice Cary, John Brougham, W. F. Heath, Mrs. M. A Kidder, Geo. Lowell Austin, Harry Clifton, C. F. Shattuck, Alfred Scott Gatty, C. W. Hunt, Edmund Webb, and numerous others, embracing nearly Sixty New and Popular Songs.

For sale by all Newsdealers and Booksellers; or sent, post-paid, to any address, on receipt of price-Ten Cents each.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers, 98 Wm. St., N. Y.

MASKED GUIDE;

OR,

THE ROAD AGENTS OF THE PLAINS.

PRADER AND COMPANY.

(202 002)

Southern District of Move Logic.

A PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF THE

BY JOSEPH E. BADGER, JR.

the property of the property of the party of

DEW YORK:

BEADLE AND COMPANY, PUBLISHERS,

98 WILLIAM STREET.

MEASETED GETTEDE;

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1870, by

BEADLE AND COMPANY, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

(No. 203.)

BE JUSEPH E BADGER JE

BEALDING COMPANY, PUBLISHER, stowed while the minute and the property of the long and the long always Ponto, now planking some simple wild-flower to fasten in her

MASKED GUIDE.

CHAPTER I.

THE RESIDENCE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PARTY O

THE LIFE AND DEATH GRAPPLE.

A GIRL of some twenty summers, gayly swinging a dainty straw basket in one hand, while with the other she caressed the head of a small curly dog, that gamboled and frisked around her. A broad-brimmed straw flat adorned her head, while below it hung in thick profusion long, silken curls of a deep brown, waving and floating in the gentle breeze, that played around her form as though loth to leave such pleasant company.

As she turns her head, we see that it is a fair, pleasing face, not of the highest order of beauty, to be sure, but better—a sweet, good face, with clear, rosy cheeks, small, well-formed mouth, and bright, crimson lips that imprisoned two rows of pearly teeth. A tall, graceful form gave a slightly haughty air to her appearance, but one glance at her bright blue eye and pleasant features, dispelled any impression of pride or hauteur in that character.

As she nears the outskirts of the little clearing surrounding the cluster of log-houses denominated the village of Ireton, she met and passed an aged and silvery-haired man, with a few kind words and a loving smile. He paused, and gazed after the neat form that was tripping along so gayly and unconcerned:

"Sweet Jessie Moss, no wonder all love you. So bright, cheerful and kind. Bless thy pretty face!" and with a brighter smile playing around his mouth, the old gentleman pursued his way homeward.

Jessie soon left the little group of houses behind her, and pro-

Ponto, now plucking some simple wild-flower to fasten in her glossy curls, or merrily caroling a verse of some song as she slowly sauntered along the grass-grown path. Ere long she entered the woods, and slightly quickening her pace, she passes by the lovely wildwood blossoms that thickly studded the green sward, raising their heads and twinkling at her from their grassy bed, as though wondering whether she was not an angel, and if so, where were her wings?

The woods now appeared more open, the trees growing further apart, until at length Jessie entered a valley that was entirely devoid of underbrush. Here the object of her walk was apparent, for the grass was mottled with scarlet. In a short time she had filled her basket with the ripe, delicious strawberries, and again wandered through the forest, plucking the bright, many-hued flowers that grew on every side, filling her apron to running over.

Presently she reached a small brook that rippled merrily along through the woods, and after placing the basket of fruit in an eddy, where they would be kept cool and fresh, she sought out a soft, mossy seat at the foot of an old elm tree.

Here she twined some of the more brilliant flowers into a wreath, with which she decorated her brow. Ponto was lying at Jessie's side, gazing with half-closed eyes up into his mistress' face as she arranged the remaining flowers into a bouquet. The low, soft notes of a love-song were warbled with a sweetness that rivaled the woodland songsters that flitted from bough to bough in the tree overhead. There was a delicious freshness in her voice that reminded one of the fabled sirens of old.

The flowers were nearly all arranged, when a sudden bark and yelp of terror from Ponto startled her, and looking up with a quick, startled glance, Jessie's eyes fell upon an object that fairly froze her blood with terror. Her lips parted to emit a shriek, but fortunately her terror was so great as to prevent its utterance, and she sat still and motionless as a marble statue.

And no wonder, for it would be no shame for a strong man to feel alarmed under the circumstances. To be sitting totally defenseless, far from assistance, with scarce a half-score yards dividing you from the long, gaunt form of a full-grown pantker, whose lips, drawn back, disclosed to view the cruel white fangs, ears laid back, and the sharp yellow claws that pierce the ground with a terribly significant motion.

No wonder that she fell into a deathlike swoon while the panther was crouching to the ground as if about to spring upon and rend her in pieces. With an almost imperceptible motion of her head, Jessie slowly sunk back against the trunk of the tree by which she was still sitting.

Stealthily watching its intended victim, the wild beast crouched in the same spot where Jessie had first observed him, its long tail slowly sweeping the ground, only waiting for some motion or sign of life to make the fatal leap. For some moments it remained thus, then, with a noiseless, cat-like tread, began circling around the form of the still-unconscious maiden, at each revolution drawing nearer and nearer to the young girl.

Suddenly a footstep echoed through the glade, and at the same instant a low sigh broke from Jessie's lips, who was just returning to consciousness. Instantly the panther resumed its crouching position, and as Jessie raised one hand to her face, he flattened his body still more, and with every nerve stretched to its utmost tension made his dread leap.

The beast was still in mid-air when a sharp report echoed through the woods, and with a wild scream of agony, the furious animal fell in a writhing heap at the feet of the now conscious maiden. A terrified shriek burst from her pallid lips, that was mingled with a clear, encouraging shout, as a tall, agile form bounded forward, and grasping the struggling animal with his naked hands, cast it with violence from the feet of Jessie. Then drawing a knife, the young man approached the wounded panther with the intention of killing it.

With a low growl the beast recovered its feet, and regarded the hunter with a menacing look in its fiery eyes. The blood was slowly dripping from a wound between the eyes, where the bullet had glanced harmlessly off, only inflicting a painful flesh wound, and partially stunning it for the time being. The hunter still continued to approach, when, with a shrill yell, the infuriated beast sprung upon him, and bore him back to the ground.

By an almost superhuman effort, the young man cast the animal from his body, and rising upon one knee he clutched the panther by the throat with his left hand, while his right drove the long, keen blade to the hilt in the beast's side. Again the knife sought the seat of life, and again those cruel talons tore and rended the hunter's flesh.

The dreadful conflict raged minute after minute; both man and beast were growing faint from loss of blood, and it was difficult to determine which would be the victor. At length, the heroic young stranger elevated the hand clasping his knife, the panther struck it with its paw, sending it far from the owner's hand, thus leaving him totally unarmed and at the raging animal's mercy.

A cry of despair burst from the man's lips at this catastrophe, yet he grappled with the beast, striving to throttle it. As Jessie heard the exclamation, and saw the crimsoned steel hurled almost at her feet, she cast off the incubus of horror that had fettered her limbs, grasped the weapon, and, regardless of the fierce growls that came from the enraged animal, ran forward, and the next moment the handle of the bloodstained knife was tightly clenched in the right hand of the almost exhausted youth.

With hope renewed in his breast at this unexpected assistance, the stranger plunged the keen blade again and again into the writhing form of his antagonist. All this time those terrible claws were tearing and lacerating his shoulder and breast in a most fearful manner, while the ground around them was mottled with pools of fast-congulating blood.

Growing desperate, the man relinquished his grasp upon the panther's throat, and driving his knife to the hilt in the animal's neck, grasping the haft with both hands, he almost severed the beast's head from its body. With one convulsive quiver, the sinewy limbs relaxed their grasp, and the brute fell upon his side, dead!

Rising to his feet, the victor gazed around him, and, as his eyes fell upon the form of the beautiful girl, he muttered, in a feeble tone:

" Saved, thank God!"

As he uttered these words his tall, graceful form reeled for a moment, then tottering forward a few steps, he fell upon his face in a deep swoon. A piercing cry from Jessie, as she saw her brave deliverer fall, apparently dead, and the next moment his head was pillowed upon her lap, while with frantic efforts she en leavored to restore him to sensibility. When she saw that all her efforts were in vain, a strange, will fear fluttered at her heart, for she thought the bold youth was dead—had died in her defense.

A stylowering his herd to the ground, and snatching up her her, she is stened to the brook, where she filled it to the brim with ever, cold, sparkling water, and deshed it into the face of the worm had hanter. After repeating this several times, Jessie seria raise i his head to her hap, and with beseeching we ris entre and the young man to come back to life; and evercome by her feelings she repeatedly pressed her sweet lips to his broad, white brow.

It would seem that such restoratives would waken one from the grave, especially when applied as plentifully as in the present case; but for a time even that failed of the desired effect. All tidags must have an end, however, and at length the would drain slowly unclosed his eyelils, and revealed to Jessie's gaze a pair of dark and historis eyes.

A bright glow of crims on over pread Je sie's features as she to a like archaet goze of wonder and admiration. In a few got the tows, that some led upon his senses like the musical coolof the dove, she began to mumur her hearfelt thanks for his having seved for life, when he begged of her never a sin to me. I im it, saying that it was no more than any man would have done for so beautiful a being, who—

At lades with a still deeper blash the gling her cheeks, put a step to his the pooly by placing her rosy points over his me the Fortun dely both were brought back to earth as in by so you severe twinges of pain, caused by the penther's tearing claws and to the that drew a half-stiffed exchangion of pain from the lips of the hunter, while the cell beads of agony started out upon his forehead.

As Jessia co. It do nothing by Lerself to relieve his pain, should be printed the lower this here tupon her apren for a pillow, and assure a him that she we all soon return, with assistance, specially with step as light as a fawn. Not ence did she prose, but has no bonness with flying feet, but with heart as heavy as I al, for she have the result of the drama just enceted.

At length she reached the villege and son paused at the door of old Dr. Morton, who fortunately was at home. In a few hasty words Jessie explained the events of the day, and implored him to come to the wounded man's assistance it.m.ediately, with help if necessary.

In a short time they were on their way, with two steps men bearing blankets and pillows, with an ax wherewith to fushion a litter.

When the old clim tree was reached Jessie paised with a look of terror upon her face, for the youth looked so pale and ghastly that she feared he was dead. But her face his, swere soon relieved, for the doctor pronounced it but a sween, caused from excessive pain and less of blood. While the good old man was applying restoratives, the two borderers were arranging a litter. Two slender poles were cut, and smaller branches laid across them, the whole covered with the blankets the doctor's forethought had provided.

Then, as the wounded man was still unconscious, they deally stripped the panther of its hide. This was placed across the foot of the litter, and then the man was gently like had placed in as comfortable a position as possible. Despite the care used, a groun of agony broke from the stranger's lips, and his eyes opened with an expression of bewill canonical in their depths. He strove to rise, but the movement called 1 of the another groun, and sinking back, he muttered:

"I remember now. Where is my horse?"

"We have seen no horse; where did you have him?" asked Dr. Morton.

"Take the whistle from my neck and blow it. He will come."

As the shrill, prolonged till of the ivory whistle rang through the woods, it was answered by a prolonor incide, it lowed by the quick tramp of iron-shod hoots, and a robbe steed bounded to the side of the litter, and with a low what my of delight, pressed its velvet muzzle against the cheek of its master. It was a large, well-built, iron-rapy, mostly hard black in its hind-quarters, and capatisoned with a noticely stable and paraphernalia. The wounded man passed has hard over the horse's face, and then such back exhaust.

The litter was now taken up by the two ber levels, will be Dr. Morton led the horse, and in a short time the village was reached, and the corrège passed before Dr. Merten's Lang.

while the worthy doctor entered, to explain matters, as well as to have a bed arranged for the wounded man.

The building, originally a double log-house—that is, a large square room at either end, connected by a covered passage or porch—consisted of three good-sized rooms, the passage-way new being walled in; and a kind of out-door kitchen. A fence of pling split from the white-oak tree, surrounded a neat vertable gard n in the rear of the building, while at the spire and front the ornamental beds of flowers and shrubbery gave evidence of the good taste and industry of Miss Jessie.

While arrangements are being made for the reception of the wounded man, a few words regarding the Moss family, and how they came to settle in the border town of Ircton, may not be amiss.

The outbreak of the California gold fever, in '49, found Wyvil Moss in New York, fighting the wolt from the door, having been reduced in a single moment from great wealth to bankruptey, by a series of unfortunate speculations. After his affairs were a tiled up, and all debts paid, he found that he had less than a thousand dollars that he could call his own. His family consisted of but his wife, a son, and one daughter.

Proguring a situation for Fred, he placed the money in tank in his wife's name, only deducting enough to buy a mining outfit. Then he joined a wagon-train as teamster, and so reached the "New El Dorado." With one "partner," he crack up the country, and finally opened a claim on the north for lof the Rio de los Plum is, or "Feather River." Fortune favored them from the first, and a rich lead or pocket of negrets was struck, just before reaching the "bed-rock."

Toward the close of the next year's working season, Wyvil M as returned to New York, only to find a house of mourning, Frederick having died several days before, after a short illues. This fact, combined with the continued ill-health of his wife, in luced him to remove West, in hopes that in a clearer climite her health would be restored.

Joining company with several families, they started, and finally decided to settle where we now find them. Hvery winter, however, was spent in the East, as the prairie winters were too severe for Mrs. Moss, who was still delicate, although considerably invigorated by the change.

From time to time other travelers would pause, attracted by the beautiful situation and virgin soil that could be hed for the mere improving it, until, at the time in question, over two-score houses were dignified by the appellation of Incton.

CHAPTER II.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE PLAINS.

Or. Morron pronounced the wounds of the stranger severe, but not dangerous, and that with good care he wen't be able to resume his journey in a fortnight. And this, it is not less to say, the good people heard with satisfaction, for Jessie was the idol of her parents' heart, and nothing they could say or do was too much to testify their gratitude to him who had so gallantly risked his life for hers.

A few days after his introduction, the stranger tell his stay. That his home was in Chicago, his father a wealthy hander, and he being an only child was allowed his choice as to which line of life he should follow. Choosing the regular army, he was now a captain—Captain Hart Toulmin. That his regiment was now stationed at Fert Leavenwerth, and that he had been sent on efficial business to Fort Riley. That he was nilling leisurely along when he much the crouching partier, but could not see its prey, as the tree-trunk intervened. He dismounted, and taking his carbine discharged the timely shot as already stated.

The packet was intrusted to a reliable man to be obveyed to Fort Riley, and a note, detailing the cruse of his forced delay, sent to Toulmin's commanding officer at Leavento rth. Then, as Hart grew stronger, he, together with Jessie, with take daily walks, that gradually grew before as his energy slowly returned; or else they would mount their horses to a long, wild race over the rolling prairie.

Either Jessie's parents must have been worfally blind, or they were not averse to the idea of calling the gay, dashing officer "son-in-law." For there could be but one calling to the long tite-à-tites the young people were allowed to enjoy. Besides the enchantment thrown around Hart, by the courage he had shown in saving her from so fearful a death, he was young, lem lsome, and possessed an excellent education.

At d so it was no wonder that Jessie found herself thinking for more about the fascinating stranger than she would care to acknowle like, even to herself—far more than was prudent of a perfect stranger. And he? Ah, well; he poured into her willing ear the tale of his love in words so ardent, so cloquent, apparently so fall of sincerity, that one far less enchanted than Jessie would have had no doubt of his truthfulness—one day while sitting beneath the spreading branches of the eld elm tree where they had first met.

She listened in silence. Her heart was too full of calm, holy happiness for her to break the spell by words. But her silence could not be misconstrued, and for the first time her lips were pressed by a man, other than her father.

The hours rolled on unheeded, and the lovely sunset found them still scated upon the mossy bank. Then as the shades grew more dense, Jessie aroused herself with an effort, and they walked slowly, arm in arm, homeward. That night, after supper, Jessie left the room, and Hart told the father and mother how dearly he loved their child, and asked her land in marriage, offering to resign his commission and settle down in Ireton if they were not willing to remove to Chicago.

The mother sought her daughter, while Wyvil Moss meditate I upon the proposition. At length his answer was given, as follows: If Hart Toulmin could produce unquestionable evilence of his good moral character, and if his prospects in lite were such as would justify him in marrying, then his fate rested with Jessie. If she consented, then no obstacles would be cast in his way.

With this, Hart professed himself satisfied, saying he would return to Lowenworth and procure the necessary papers, and hasten to buy them before Mr. Moss. And early the next morning, after a short forewell with Jessie, the captain mounted his noble iron-gray charger, and set out upon his journey.

The next few days passed drearily enough to Jessie, and she wandered frequently to the spots that were made sacred in her eyes, by the happy moments she had spent there in company with him whom she loved so truly. She was not happy; her heart was full of forebodings, nameless fears that she could not fathom. For she never, even for a moment, doubted the truth of Hart Toulmin; only there was a dread of something fearful that seemed about to befull her. In vain she strove to banish it; sleeping or waking it stood before her, vague and undefined, yet none the less horrible.

One pleasant afternoon a miserable-looking object entered the village. Bareheaded and almost naked, wounded and wayworn, it was with difficulty that one could discern the skin of a white man beneath all this. Not replying to the cager questioning of those who surrounded him, the stranger staggered on until he reached the gate of Wyvil Mess. Then entering, he stepped up to the open door, but as if his streeth had been only granted him to reach this haven, he tettered and fell upon the floor like a dead man.

But it proved to be only a swoon, caused by great fitigue and hardships. A couch was hastily prepared, an lafter Lying the stranger upon it, the face was cleansed of the thick layer of blood and grime that had fairly eaked. An exclamation of wonder broke from the doctor's lips, and he uttered the name of Floyd Spencer. The name passed from mouth to mouth, in astonishment, for it was that of one of their old friends, who together with his family had joined a wag astronauth to bound for Carifornia, some time previously. And great was the curiosity and anxiety to learn what had so greatly reduced the gay, blithesome youth to such a worfal strait, for the Spencer family had been highly esteemed during their residence in Ireton, and had made themselves loved by all.

Not until after several days was the young man able to command himself sufficiently to enter into details, but he led let enough escape him during his temporary deliti in to show that he alone of all the gay, hopeful company he had joined was now alive. But one evening he told his tale, as tollows:

"When two days out from Ircton we were joined by a genthemanly appearing mean, of nearly thirty, as I should joing. He told a phusible tale of how he had accidentally become separated from his company, and requested leave to join us. This was readily granted, and he soon became a general favorine with both odd and young. It seemed as though none could rasist his smooth, winning way, save Zenas Gale, our quark the red healed guide, who watched him like a cat does a prouse. He privately warned our leader, but as he could give no satisfactory reasons, only that he "looked like a sacke," Cuptain Neil Moore, was esteemed still more highly, if that could be.

"Well, we reached the Sweetwater in safety, and as it was at a very high stage, we determined to lie over for one day, as it would be risky crossing just then. We went into camp about three o'clock, and several, among whom was Moore, sallied out for game. It was after midnight when he returned, and his horse, a magnificent animal, was recking with sweat and ready to drop from faigne. This fact he explained by saying that in chasing a buffalo, he had lost his bearings, and only retraced his way with great difficulty.

"The next day, after a spont, Gole said he had discovered Indian signs. About noon three Cheyennes rode alone to the cump, making signs of peace, two of them being squaws. The brave left his arms, together with the horses, upon the prairie, and then was allowed to enter the lines.

"Our land offered a comple of trifling prizes for the best wrestier and leaper, and all the men were gathered around cliner as spectators or contestants, with the exception of Zane G.E. All the weapons had been stacked beneath a tree that grow within the corral. During the trials of skill, ether Indians had come in, after disarming themselves as the first had, to ely one-half of them squaws. No presons noticed their arowing numbers save the guide, and when he mentioned it to Captain Warnock he was testily told that it he was affailed a parcel of unamed squaws he might get into the wagen with the women and babies.

"After this he took his station, ritle in hand, near the stack of arms, with his back against the trunk of the tree. The spons went one in ha number of Indians joined in the games, while their nambers still increased, but so gradually as to escape general notice. But at length the prizes were awarded, and as if by magic the Indians separated from the crowd and joined the group of squaws that were seated near the tree.

"The man who called himself Neil Moore raised the horrible war-whoop of the Cheyennes, and drawing a revolver with each hand, shot down Mr. Warnock and another. Then the squaws cast aside their blankets, and beneath them were shortened ritles, knives and tomahawks, which the braves solzed, and then began a horrible massacre. The bewildered non stood at first like sheep to be shot down unresistingly, only one of them prepared.

"At the first signal, Gale drew bead upon the renegate, Moore, but one of the squaws caught him by the wrist and tried to throw him down. The rifle was discharged, but it did no injury. Then he dashed the steel-shool butt of the weapon upon the squaw's head, who had saved the architect from a well-merited fate. Drawing his revolvers, he singled out his mark with the coolness of a hunter shooting quality and at every report one of the foe would utter his death-shab.

The men now cast off their stupor, and grasping any weapon they could by hands upon, fought as only men can fint who are doing battle for all that is dear to them; but to r numbers were sadly thinned. Twice a crowd of the classy imps rushed against Zene Gale, and twice they were classy back by the storm of leaden hall that scattered the gransward with dead and dying forms. When the revolvers were emptied, he hurled them at the foe, and stooped to graner others that by at his feet. But before he could rise error, a tomahawk stroke upon the head leveled him across the weapons.

"Of my own deeds I can recall but little. At first I show has if petrified; the terrible suddenness of the attack shapers have me. But, as I saw a huge, brawny savage bury his hole. In the brain of poor dear Clay, my brother, I storted into his, and with the sickening, crashing sound mingled with the fail moan of agony still ringing through my brain, I have to a the murderer, clutching his throat with a grasp of iron will have him to the ground. It was so sudden and the expected that the fall forced his hatchet from his hand had been be could arise I had seized the weapon, and with one blow clave his head in twain. With one quick glance around me, I want of victims. Less them a dozen whites were upon their feet, and not one of these unharmed. The squaws were doing their part; they were in the wagons, butchering the defensele 3 women and children. I could see the bleeding torms of my father and brother, and the guide. I saw the tell, graceful form of him whom we had known as Captain Neil Moore, dealing death and gaping wounds at every blow, and parrying those aimed at him in return, as if he bore a charmed life. I saw a wounded man hardly pressed by two savages, and rushed to his assistance. I cut down one of them, receiving at the same time a severe wound upon the head that blinded me, and suggesting onward a few steps, fell close beside a scrutby bush that partially concealed me from the view of the savages.

mixed in the mel's and showered my blows wherever I could distinguish the dusky skin of a forman.

"I could not have remained insensible for any length of time, but when I opened my eyes, the butchery was at an end, and while some were plundaring the wagons, others were doing the same to those who had fallen. I knew that if I remained where I was, discovery was certain, and to be found was certain. So, I distally but cautiously I crawled down to the river, and entering it, dove down-stream as long and for as I could without taking I reath. When I are se I only allowed my nose to appear above water, then dove again. At length I crawled, exampled, under a dense overbanging bush, where, with my head above water, I was still securely concealed.

"While there I could plainly hear the wild and triumplant yells of the Cheyenaes, as they exulted in the victory they had obtained over the emigrants. Then the din increased and I know they had discovered a couple of kegs of whisky that was stowed away in one of the wagons. The turnult deep ned until I was nearly deafened, and it seemed as if all the fiere's of the lower regions had been loosed to carouse over the massacre that had just ended.

war as were moved, and then the hillons sere ching was redealed. In a few moments a brill at light from the camp begin to dissipate the fist-gathering twinight, and the red glare revealed the flashing suctace of the river and surrounding objects with the distinctness of midday, reaching even to where I was concealed. The wagons, and such plunder as was too bulky for removal, were being destroyed.

"I heard a loud uproar as of men in disputation, followed by a single whoop, mingled with the clear erack of a revolver. For a moment all was still, then I could distinguish the look, firm tones of the renegade, but could not tell what he was a ying. Perhaps a quariel had arisen concerning a me coveted atticle, and as there was but one shot fired, the sculement must have been summary.

"When my mind became more compose!, I began to suff reconsiderably from my wounds, several of which were quite severe. This, together with the dreadful thoughts that I could not banish, of my murdered father, brother, mother and sisters, nearly drove me crazy.

and the whole time I was forced to keep myself build to the neck in the icy-cold water, for the drunken, half-crozy flex is were roving through the wood or along the river's back, as fancy led them, and I knew that discovery would be instant death, and for all I was so wretched, I chose to live leager. I had work to do, an end to accomplish, and that was reverge. Revenge upon the whole red-skinned race, but more especially the renegale who called himself Neil Moore.

"Twice during that long night I heard the blooker ling shricks and grouns of some dranken wretch, as he felt into the fire, and his comrades' shouts of merrinent at their unavailing efforts to escape from the devoming element.

"At lest the sun rose, and hearing nothing, toward noth I ventured from my covert, and found that the robb is had as appeared. But, oh, my God! what a scene they left behind them! I can not describe it—words are powerless. Enough that my worst fears were realized. A few short hours but it, I i med one of a living, happy family of six. Now, I alone remained, with barely life enough to perform the last sacred rites for the whom I had loved so dearly.

"I conveyed as best I could—how I can not say—the remains of my dear ones down to the water's edge. Then I collected such fragments of the wagons as I thought would answer my purpose, and together with a couple of decayed but busyout logs, I formed from them a good-sized, substantial raft. On this I placed my lead, and searching around I found a revolver lid bin in a bash, and an old ax. Then pushing from shore, I was seen floating down the river with my ghastly freight. With a pilee of board I managed to steer clear of all obstructions, and just before sundown I landed upon a long, low island, partially covered with willows.

"With great pain and perseverance, I managed to excavate a pit large enough to answer the purpose of a graye for my decil, and I believe I offered up a prayer ere I covered them from sight, but I remember nothing until late the next afternoon, when I awoke from a swoon. As I knew I should soon patisa if I remained where I was, I once more started my raft down the river. But my ill-fortune still followed me, for, while in the swift current, my float struck with such force against a snag that it went to pieces, and I was east into the water. Instinctively I struck out for shore, for my will had nothing to do with it. I was in a maze, or trance-like state, and cared not whether I lived or died.

"However, I succeeded in reaching shore, but when I recall d my feeble state, the distance I was from any point where I might hope to receive help, and found that both my revolver and ax were lost, at the bottom of the river, is it a wonder that I cursed my fate and longed to die? But then I thought of him who was the cause of all this, and started upon my wearisome journey.

and icards aps I was forced to undergo, before I finally arrived at Fort Riley; but for three clays I had nothing to eat save prairie crickets and grasshoppers. At this place I told my stry and asked for help—nay, I begged it upon my bended larges—to avenge my murdered kindred. But no; I was presentations in wishing it. In what did my wrongs concern the property of the property o

When I was able to put one foot before another, I started for this place, regred, sick and upon foot, as I entered the fort. You know the rest, and that I intend, as soon as I am able, restor a body of men, for the sole purpose of ferroting out this Moore. From what I have since learned, I have reason to believe that he is leader of a band of prairie pirates, who rendezvous somewhere among the Black Hills," concluded Floyd Spencer.

"What kind of an appearing man is this Neil More?"

asked Wyvil Moss.

"Just inagine a man between twenty-five and thirty, fally six feet high, rather slender, but lithe and powerful as a panth r; clear complexion, dark brown hair worn rather long, mustache a shade lighter, straight nose and large, brown eyes, and you have a fair idea," replied Spencer, not noting the change in his host's face as the description proceeded.

The three listeners looked at each other with startled glances. They each read their fears confirmed in the eyes of the others. No need to utter the question aloud; it was well—ah, only too well-understood!

Then Wyvil Moss spoke, as Jessie slowly dreepel, and recled in her chair.

"Tend to daughter, mother; she's going to faint. My God forgive me if I wrong him by a thought, but I relly for that we have been nursing a scrpent that will turn in I sting us at last! Floyd," he added, "your description corresponds exactly with that of the man who saved our Jessie's life. How long ago did this massacre occur?"

" On the 9th of April," was the reply.

"And we saw him on the 3d day of June. I fear they are the same! I feel it in my heart!"

CHAPTER III.

THE SWOOP OF THE VULTURE.

The days slowly passed on, and nearly a menth had of polisince the departure of Captain Hart Toulmin it refer Leavest worth, yet nothing had been heard from him. And this maccountable silence served to still further accountable silence served speedily overcome the first dread that had flashed upon her, and almost hated herself for entertaining even a momentary do to to five lover's integrity, and longed for his coming, that he might vindicate himself.

But as easys and weeks rolled around her restlessness increased, and she often roamed for miles, unmindful what she was doing or where she was going. Floyd Spencer often j ined her, and it was plain to all except the one most deeply interested, that he was fast learning to worship the fair Jessie. Her purents did not object, for, apart from their having no finite to find with Floyd, they thought that if the eyes of Jessie could be brought to look impartially upon the handsome youth, the task of forgetting the unworthy Toulmin would not be so happless. But as yet she regarded him only as a friend.

One hot, sultry summer day, Jessie was wan bring along one of the walks rendered sacred in her eyes from its association with the mone she had be and to love so ardently, and dispute was in her heart, for she feared those pleasant days lead vanidard, never to return—when the sharp ringing of a large's ir meshod hoots, going in a gallop, smote upon her ear. The last bleed surred to her face, while her heart gave one leap and then stood still.

In a few moments the horseman appeared. Ah, how well size know that iron-gray steed, and the rider! With outstrated arms she spring forward, and called him by name. He is ged from the seldle, and the next moment she was tightly classed in his arms, while he showered hot, passionate kinds up an her brow and lips. If diffightened at his almost time arlor, Jessie with irow from his embrace and murmured:

- On, Hart, you don't know how deeply I have suffered in a your absence! Why did you stay away so long without letting us hear from you?"
- "My darling, I can and will explain all satisfactorily. Retain it was not my fault. Did you doubt me, Jessie?"
- "Nover; but you don't know the dreaked things you are acres left. They say you are the leader of a bund of robbers, and that you chesed the massiere of a train of emigrants hast April, upon the banks of the Sweetwater."

[&]quot; They say! And who are they, if I may ask, that interest themselves so deeply in my affairs?" he hastily uttered, while a fierce scowl distorted his handsome features, that escaped Jessie's notice.

"We were told so by one of the emigrants who managed to escape. His name is—" said Jessie, when she was interrupted by a person calling her name, and the next monerat Floyd Spencer stood before them.

"Miss Jessie, I have been hunting you this half-hour. Your mother-"

Then, as he caught sight of the man's face, he started, and uttered a wild, deadly laugh.

"Captain Neil Moore, so we meet again, renegate—morr-derer! My God, I thank thee!" and he leaped toward his foe, with a long knife glittering in his han!

The latter nimbly sprung aside, thus avoiding the blow that was aimed at his heart, and as the young man possed him, dealt him a stunning blow with his fist just behind the car, that felled him like a log, the blood gushing from his ears, mouth and nostrils.

"By all the fiends in Tartarus, the game is blocked! I thought he was killed with the rest. Cause the back! I must have, just as the finit was falling into my mouth," he rage!. Then turning to Jessie, who stood as if petriled at the seene, "But come, girl, I will not leave you, at any rate;" and he caught her by the arm and dragged her to where his herse was still standing."

"What would you do?—who are you? Speak tail tell me that what he said was filse!" she cried, as he mounted the horse, holding her before him.

"As to who I am, I answer, your very humble's rwart at I devoted lover, Captain Hart Toulmin; and I am going to take you with me upon a little journey—our well'ingeter, if it please you, my angel," and he houghed a sarkenic hargin so strange and hourible that he seemed no long rather same and Jessie s'un idered, and then, as she comprehended under deized that the man she had so ten hely lord was of a verity the deman he had been pictured—in hely the way a included uttered, "I thought he man k." I with the rest," had consisted him—she sunk into a deathlike swoon.

The noble horse bounded away in obslinger to the merciless spur that was fiercely applied to his flanks, and the trees so ned to fly past them with the speed of thought. The forest was lest be hind them, and the prairie reached, but still the past was unabated, whole mile after mile was placed between them and the once-happy home, too soon, also, to be made a house of mourning.

The son was for down the western sky, when, with a faint meet, Ploy I Spencer slowly and painfally rose erect, and got I are and him with a lewil lered air, striving to recellect word had hippened. Then, as his gaze fell upon the gleaming kalledying upon the greensward, the truth flashed across his mind, and stooping, he began examining the footprints before him.

Novice as he was in the art, he could easily see that the hers had been doubly loaded, and that Jessie had not gone of her own accord; that a degree of force had been used.

With a groun of despair he recalled what a fearful start the orline weeld have before pursuit could be made, and he stering at the top of his speed he soon reached the village, and telling every man he met to follow him, he paysed before the door of Wyvil Moss, who, together with his wife and a stranger, appared at the samil of the uproar, as every man asked his neighbor what was the matter. Then Spencer spoke:

"I have sal, terrible news to tell you, friends, but it reast be told. You all know my story, and that the company I belonged to were butchered by the Indians, led by a white non. And you know, too, the person that savel Mos Jesie Mos from the penther. I now swear to you that they are or earl the same person. I met him today, with Mis Moss, at I tried to kill him, but Swan savel him, and he knocked the set." So. Then he carried off—Moss, look to your wife, non!" and the latter turned just in time to catch his fainting within his arms, and then here her into the house. "Yes, he has stolen the one we all loved so well! And now I ask you, man, shall he go free, or shall we deal with him as he deserves?"

There was but one answer, and every man lastened to his horse to prepare for speedy pursuit, save the stranger who had come out from the house of Wyvil Mass. As Spencer turned to enter the door, he noted him for the first time, and stared in mute amazement, for he recognized one whom he thought dead.

Whoop ee, yourker, gin us ylar paw; I that ye war rable out, shore?' shouled the quor little red fact, related man, as he graspe! Floyd's hand, wringing it as the girlle wall squeeze it dry, while his moccasined feet kept up a sort of double-shuffle.

" Zenus Gale, is it possible! Why, I saw you hall or co."

"Squeelin' painters! hain't it fenny! Two deal man ameetin' an' shakin' han's. But I was purty nigh wiped out. I was, but the hatchet kinder glanced an' on'y jist stracked me. Then, when they's cleanin' out the rest an' likin' that ha'r, I comed-to, an' when a dratted nigger tried the game on me, I fotched 'im a swipe over the nodelle wi' a pistli-hatt. Then I grupped a animile an' vanosed.

"Roarin' bufflers! what a hullabaloo they sot up as I sho dad Hed, an' a wheen o' the 'tarnal critters put after not, 'i hi y split; but as I had a good hoss, a lectle after a milean they gin up the chase for a had job. I put for a strip hole as I knowed on, what I bid up for a spell, till I got well. I had—the how is too long a yarn to te'll j st now—that the C seed white It j in as led us inter the trap 'd bin seen in these parts, so I moseyed down an' jest got hyar to-lay," concia' I the guide.

"And in good time, too," replied Spencer, "for I know of no man I would rather meet this mement than yous lit. There are some good hunters here, but not one who can equal you, unless it is old Hank Tripbett. Or course you go with us after this Moore, or Toulmin, or whatever he chooses to call himself?"

bottom collar on that keerd, boy. I tell ye I a n't lear to do nothin' else ontal that air double an' twisted sample are it; et I don't, call me a turkey bazzard!" call act Gala, as they entered the bouse.

It was now so late in the afternoon that with some demarring it was decided not to start upon the trail mail daybreak. The reson for this was that not over a mile or two could be made before darkness put a stop to their pursuit, as there was a rew mean. And then they knew there was slight hope of evert king the abductor, for they had no horse that could come re with the matchless one he role, even on equal terms, will be had safficient start to reach his haunts in safety, between they could over the him. Then the party could be more thoroughly organized and prepared; nothing was left but to depend upon the skill of the two scouts, Zene Gale and Hank Triplett, and that would require time.

CHAPTER IV.

HAND TO HAND!

At carliest dawn the trail was struck and followed over the self, easily in tented prairie, at a hard gailep, for there was no attempt at concerlment and the hoof-marks were deep. This pace was kept up with but little variation until an hour at a non, when the bank of a considerably-sized stream, one of the tributaries of the Sweetwater, was reached, where a halt was ordered to rest the horses.

The robber hal evidently presed for some time at this point, but his trail finally led into the stream and was lest up in the hard, gravelly bettom. The scouts a brancel clone of learning the vanning the shore. Then they crossed over, one give up, the other down stream, to ascertain if the outless had one in the cold victuals in silence.

Soly M. Lam, a young dared exil Sectebran, asked Zere G. with way the trail led, or if they had failed to learn. This is that the flery score, for he deemed his skill is trailer question, and he testily replied, with his mouth full of cold meat:

"I'm so; that's the very reason I asked you," was the quick reply.

"Snappin'-turtles!" cjaculated Gale, almost choking himself with a chunk of corn-bread, "thet 'minds me o' somethin' as happined to me in St. Louey. Ye see, I was in a lot-el thar, an' got to tellin' yarns to a lot o' city fellers, when one on 'em said, sorter low like: 'What a 'xcentric filler be is!' I got up from my chair, like this," riving from the ground and drawing closer to McLean, "an' reached over to what he was a settin," an' says I: 'Yur another!" an' fotched him a stinger, jest this way," dealing a lightning-like h'ow at the Sco'chman, that, had it taken effect, would have chued the dispute then and there.

But it was swiftly parried, while the young man replied:

"And if he was a man he did just as I do now," in king a feint with his left, while Gale, in warding it off, exposed the lower part of his face, and the hard, bony fist was p'n'ed fairly upon the scout's chin, lifting him clear from his feet, so that his head struck the ground first.

The astonished scout rose to a sitting position, and while holding his jaw with one hand extended the other, mumbling:

"Gin us y'ur paw, younker; I sees ye know how to end a yarn. No 'fence, s'pose?"

"Not in the least," and the friendship there began en led but in death.

The party now spurred rapilly up the river, for the outline had not crossed, and it was highly improbable that he had gone down-stream, as that would lead him toward the settlement; while upward was the most direct route to the Black Hills, where it was probable he had his band. His object in entering the water was or ily conjectured. By breaking the trail he would delay any party in pursuit, should such follow immediately, and thus afford him plenty of time to track a place of safety without overtasking the strength of his here. Such was the conclusion arrived at.

After a short time the party separated, one portion going on either side of the river, led by Golman! Triplet, so as to run no risk of missing the point where the one we covery from the river. Several miles were traversed without any discovery, when a wild yell was heard, and a horde of pointed savages charged from a clump of trees toward the band led by Triplett.

They were distant fully a quarter of a mile, and the whites entered the river to join their comrades. Luckily the water was not deep, and they quickly crossed; then, under lead of Gile, they flew at full speed for a timber motte, several miles distant.

They were entirumbered three to one, and upon the open or and the well-mounted Indians could ride all around the wearled horses of the whites, with their fresher animals. Their passage might have been checked at the river for a time, but their manbers were great enough to allow a portion to rule both up and down the stream, then cross, while the main being engaged the borderers. No, their only chance of safety lay in reaching the notes first. With the advantage of cover, they might hope to beat off the foe until night, with the darkness would aid them in escape.

These reflections flashed through the minds of all, in a moment, and their herses were urged on with both veice and spar. The hoofing and yelling Indians had crossed the stream, and were slowly but sarely overhauling the fugitives, who had lost some distance in joining their forces, several of their horses not taking to the water kindly. The distance was less to incarly one-half already, and in a few more moments the bullets began to hurtle after them.

The two scours each many ed to pick off a man, and relocal their fills, when the nest's was reached, and hastily throwing them elves from their saddles, a deadly volley of bullets was poured into the dense lody of pursuers. Several saddles were emptical, but still the pointed demons came on. Then the revolvers of the whites became to play, in the hands of those well used to the weapon. The savages faltered, then turned and hardy if a beyond range. They could not stom a hithestorm of habit, and can be not yet been found who will do so for any length of time.

If y a say ges were lying upon the prairie, either cold and sill in death, or writhing in mortal acony, while others were say relieg in their seats when they retreated.

One of the white men had been killed during the race, two others we madel, one most dly, while there were nearly half a slore who were injured, more or less severely, during the assault, despite the advantage they had of good cover. The faces of all wore a shade of anxiety with the exception of the two scouts. Nothing could down them, although it was patent that a few more such victories would be equivalent to a dedected.

Warmed to the strife, Triplett declared that he would have a scalp, or lose his own in the attempt, and Gule, not to be outdone, volunteered to accompany him. Looking carefully to the priming of their ritles, they remounted and dished in meant in amazement at the daring thus displayed, they, as they comprehended their object, daried forward to frust the it. Having a wholesome dread of the long rifles, they displayed behind the bodies of their horses, showering bullets and arrows from under the animal's belly or neck.

The scouts paused for a moment, and with the whit-like crack of the ritles, one Indian drepped to the grown with a badly shattered knee, while a horse, with an almost laterary side of agony, reared up and fell leavily upon the time of its rider. Then each of the scouts stooped in their satisfies and grasped the ankle of a dead savage; returned satily to the motte amil the showers of balls and limitling arrows.

Hank coolly cut the feathered end from an arrow tiet led pieced his left arm, then pulling the barbed head the rid, is tightly bound a handkerchief around it. Gale had only received a slight flesh wound in the thigh, and coff of his old slowched hat, he exhibited a long blue well upon the typ of his head, where a bullet had "creased" him.

Fired by this bold act, and readily divining its nearly a general charge was made by the savages. They stated in the chorce, but as they neared the line at which the deally of a world begin playing, their rador sensibly cooled, and not oper half a score deshed within made. Two ritles spake first; the leaders fell from their horses. They, at least, was in the retreat the war-path. And the others, seeing for the first tree how few their number was, turned and rede back to their more cowardly comrades.

All at once Zone Gode uttered a cry of serption, and pointed to one of the deal menthed had been becaute in. While being dragged along the ground his shirt had been torn upon the breast. Through the rent gleamed the clear, unstrained dair of a white man! The paint and emblems upon his face were worn only as a dispulse.

Upon examination the others also proved to be whites. The correlation was easily arrived at. These men probably lessed to the hard of the robber they were after. Most harly be had met them, and sent them on the watch, hoping thus to be freel from his pursiers. For it was not his ly they would attack a purty where they were certain to a purpose hard flows than blackt, unless something unusual was in the wind.

So have fact, as we may as well at the. They had insimultions not to allow one man to escape to tell the face of the electric. All must be killed or taken prisoners.

The "prince is and" was not a large one. Thirty following wer licarry and in from one esge to the opposite. For a law force every side the grows extended into the rate. But the rotation for was covered with a comparatively denoted to the late of the law and increase the character of the late was rounded by smaller ones.

As the options had encircled their refere, the whites were displayed in a like marker, while their losses were tailored for the research restriction of the pelacitor to entitle any time of their arithmeters to the special their arithmeters there is a fine enemy could concentrate to applie them.

A group of the best of were greated around the fernisof the two collects when a report was beard, and one of their ranks, Jack R yiels care a special declarable hand filled at, snot through the brain. A coul of light-blue smoke area shorty to in the gross, at a point not fifty yar is from the motion.

A couple of this were clock a robust the point, but who to other result than electron decisive shoets. The between the test which a clock is for they tally realized the extent of their decision. It would be made as for them to push out to aver restheir electricities about the place were precise, in the block of a law many marks men were electronic in the block of a law than the form. And have were precise, in the block of a law is now. They might been concentral behind the test in this, but not for long, as the enemy must be watched, and then the count is a marks men could shift their position until no person would be safe.

"T'arin' grizzlys, but this must be stopped! The question is, how?"

"Shin up a tree," laconically replied Triplett, with a rod toward the object mentioned.

"Gosh all hemlock, but ye're right, Hank," and with out more ado, Gole and one other, with their rithes strapped up a their backs, began climbing up the hage tree above mentioned, aided in their ascent by the grape-vines.

This was not free from danger, but should their plans be discovered by those hidden in the grass, no efforts would be spared for putting a veto upon their project in the shape of a ragged bullet. But the surrounding trees screened them from view until the lower limbs were reached. From thence they selected their positions, each behind a good-size laimb, where they could command a fair view of the prairie. Then Gale gave a signal that all was ready.

Daring the tedious task of mounting the tree, those below had not been idle. A hunting-shirt had been deff i and the upper portion of it stuffed with grass. A piece of word answered for a neck and head, upon which was placed a should lat. Then a rifle was discharged at the spot from whence the fital shot had come, and when the smoke raised, the decay was seen peering from behind the tree, as if to ascertain the result of its shot.

The counterfeit was good, and the bait took. A built was sent whizzing though the brain of the "man of straw," which was moved suddenly, then dropped to the ground, while Tilpelett uttered a wild cry that was echoed back from the old was for they thought it was the death-shrick of one of their entities.

Gale had his rifle poised, and as the smoke sailed away to on the fresh breeze, he saw the painted free of the trootic some marksman. Only for a moment, but that was sailed in the for the messenger of death hundled through the air, and the outlaw fell forward, with a hole in his head other than these nature had placed there, dead.

A shout of exultation went up from those in the partie as Zene announced the result of his shot. A most disperses enemy had been disposed of.

Perhaps an hour had transpired without any event occurring to break the suspense of either party. Then Warren, the near who accompanied Gale, toolishly exposed himself as he was sere inizing the prince, and a belief whizzed past his ear. He saw the end of surche, and in his expenses to reply to the compliance, fully revealed the whole upper portion of his body.

It was a fault act of carelessness to him, for another shot cane from the same point, and, stricken even unto death, the reformable borderer sprung from his parch, and crashing the ground, a mangled corpse.

But the author of his death did not have long to exult over his a sea, for a messarger of death visited him, and Zenas G. hall the block of another human bling upon his hand.

The other marksman, socing the fide of his commule, and deed, they have been a would be his, arose and fled with the specific thest ortholder. Howas switt, but death we sawifter, and the hist covered half a score yards before he fell, literally in the little with tall is, a near the him from the motion.

Not the rattempts were made, and when the san was near the we the horizon, Zen is Gale descended the tree and joined the western He drew Hank Tuplett, Wyvil Moss, and Floyd r aside, and spoke:

* Kickini in it's, pariners! We're in a tight fix, shere. And the question how is, how he we goin'to git out on't. If we stays by it, they'd wipe us out, every degreed one on us. It we I've thank up a plun, an' of you've no better, why we'll my of we kin to lith an tellera. Spittin' tomest, yes!"

As no one spoke, he continued:

"The property to Moss," must 'ither go to Fort Ri-or money. Then mosey fur Briggs' Knob, an' light a hightre wi' green wood. On'y send one mun to light the fire, an' let him kiver his trail. Then strike over to the "Three Brothers," an' wait fur us. "Twon't be long you'll hev to wait.

"Perdner an' me, ef we both git cl'ar, or ef one gits throwed, then the other, 'll hunt out what this Moore ren lezvous at, an' the best way to clean 'em out. D'y'unnerstand?' concluded Gale.

"I like the plan, all but one part, and that is, I am going along with you instead of the others," declared Spencer.

"Wal," hesitated Gale, looking at Triplett, "ef so be as pard, here is agreeable, why I won't say no. Airthquikes an' harricanes, younker, I freeze to you; ef I don't, chaw me?"

After some demurring from Moss, this plan was agreed upon, and the others informed of it. There were one or two young hotheads, who were more than half in love with the fair Jessie, who wished to join the scouts upon their perilous mission, but this Gale would not allow.

When twilight deepened into night, the three men who were to draw off the outlaws, so as to afford their comrades a chance of escape, began their preparations. They were each furnished with another revolver in addition to their own, and every load was carefully examined. Their ritles were slung across their backs. They were not to be used; all was to depend upon the pistols, for their object was to make as much noise as possible. With a revolver in each hand, aided by good by the it was hoped the ruse would be successful, and the majority if not the whole of the outlaws thus be drawn off.

Did the trio escape the first volley, they had little fears for the rest. They knew the horses they rode, and felt association that their equals were not to be found among the enemy. Hack Triplett on "Silver Heels," Gale with the horse he had confiscated at the time of the massicre on the Sweetwater, while Spencer was mounted on a magnificent blood-bay.

With the pressure of their comrades' hands still warm, as I their fervent God-speed still ringing in their ears, the trio resilently from the motte for some fifty yards; then, with will yells they separated and darted over the prairie. A volley of rate-balls was sent in the direction of their volces, and aiming at the flishes, the scouts kept up a constant fusilade, hooting and yelling enough for a score.

The next few momen's were full of anxious suspense to the party left behind in the wood. They did not know whether the ruse had succeeded or not. But they dared not wait longer, if rit might be discovered at any moment, and thus few would live to tell the tale.

So they silently stole out upon the prairie, each going in a different direction, intending to meet at the ford. Bending low in their satelles to lessen the chances of discovery, they drew near the circle where the outlaws had been stationed.

Surely McLean, the Scotchman, had chosen a course that ran at tight angles to the one taken by the three scouts. He was but in his rently well mounted, and in addition to this his charger was a diminutive Mexican mule, as obstinate as they generally are, which is saying sufficient. He had but just possed the line, when the beast halted and set up a sonorous bray that could be beard a mile.

In vain San ly spurred and kicked, he could not stop the misle. The mule, with head and tail elevated, poured forth his servade, the volume of sound amply testifying to the sound-ness of his lungs. Then San ly heard an exchanation, followed by a bright thish and report, telling only too plainly that he was discovered. The shot was well aimed, and the make, with a groan, fell upon its side, dead. Luckily McLean had free! his feet from the stirrup, and alighted safely. But he heard the tramp of a horse and saw an enemy coming at fall speed toward him. Knowing that he would be discovered, did he try to flee, he dropped into the grass, drawing his like he would be discovered. Were he discovered, he would resist as well as he call, but if not, he would lie perdu until he could slip away unobserved.

The fact that his made had been killed instantly proved the last revises decion, for it being small, as before stated, it was entirely concealed by the tall grass. The Scotchman's heart is fat, for the outlaw was coming directly toward him, and noted in your law you. A comple more bounds, and San'y restorm this fee, when the horse stumbled over the male's boy, a sing the tiler with violence over its head, and then stard start trembling in every limb. The borderer did not hesitate, but grasped the reins and leaped into the saddle, and dashed ahead in great glee at his providential escape.

Had he paused to examine the man whose place he had so unceremoniously taken, he would have found his neck was broken by the terrible fall, having alighted upon his head.

Altogether, Sandy had no cause for complaint.

But some of his comrades were not so fortunate; for the shot that had put so summary an end to the mule's selo, caused a general uproar upon the prairie. The ruse of Zone Gale had not sacceeded so completely as might have been desired, and a pertion of the outlaws, suspecting something of the kind, still remained at their posts.

When the shot was fired, the whites, deeming themselves discovered, put spurs to their horses, not knowing but that the entire band were upon them. Thus they revealed their whereabouts, and the bullets began to whistle around them, but, owing to the darkness, with but slight effect. A few of them were overtaken and forced to a bund-to-hand continut, ending quite as often fatally to one side as the other. Fortinately, by far the greater number had followed the tribef scouts, else the little band of whites would have been ab....ilated.

The first volley fire I by the outlaws at the scouts was harmless, as, in taking aim, they were only gui'd by the cris. But when this was answere I, then they would fire at the flora. And the scouts owed their safety to one simple fact: the outlaws, in aiming, did not make allowance for the theat of their mark. Hence, with but few exceptions, their missies parel believed, and did no injury. Only Floyd Speccer was well !, and that but a ball-" crease."

It was not long before the enemy discovered the trick " at had been paryed upon them, ami, as they were fist been ming distanced, they gave one last volley and laster, i back to the moste, only to find that their expected prey had also escaped them.

CHAPTER V.

THE HILL HAUNT.

When Jessie was lifted into the saddle and realized the full force of the words spoken to Toulmin (to give the outlaw his lest name), when Spencer so unexpectedly appeared, her train rected and she fainted. At first Toulmin was rather placed than otherwise, as it would render her less troubles are. But as mile after mile was traversed, and the maiden's coast arms as did not return, he grew alarmed and feared lest the sadden shock had in reality killed her.

He hastily drew a flisk of whisky from an inner pocket, and removing the stopper, was about to administer a portion, when his horse stumbled, falling to his knees, having stepped into the barrow of some animal that was concealed in the tall grass. Nothing was injured but the flisk of liquor; that was sulvered as it fell from the robber's hand, and its contents sulvered as it fell from the robber's hand, and its contents sulvered as it fell from the robber's hand, and its contents sulvered as it fell from the robber's hand, and its contents sulvered has have a first he must soon obtain water, or his captive would perish after all.

In a few minutes a small creek was reached, and riling it in, To dain gathered water in the hollow of his hand, and dished it into Jessie's face. This he repeated until, with a grap, she opened her eyes, and, with a won leting voice, asked where she was. But she mended not an answer, for the terrible truth flushed across her mind.

She say it all then—how the man she had so dearly loved was in reality the denion he had been pointed—the robber-chi fia man larer, a black-heated ranegale to his race; a foul that up a the fact of the earth! Instead of daying the fact when we are last it by Spencer, he had convicted himself by his own wo. Is. And this was the man she had deemed all that was good and noble—to whom she had plighted her troth!

Her provide it was fully aroused, and turning her head so and could look her captor fairly in the face, she demanded:

"What is the meaning of this outrage, sir?"

"The meaning, pet, is easily explained. We are only taking our wedding tour before, instead of after the coremony," laughed Toulmin. "Do not fear, my darling; this is but a rough way of wooing; still, I will not make you the worse husband for that," and he stooped to press a kiss upon her lips.

Jessie's dark eyes flashed, and, almost beside herself with anger, she struck her abductor across his face with her hand, each finger leaving a livid mark that soon changed to purple.

"Cowardly villain!—murderer!—you now wear your true colors and I see you for what you really are. But do not think you will triumph long. Men will follow your trail and bunt you out, no matter what—"

"Really, Miss Moss, you are quite an orator. We will have you haranguing my band ere long. But to be can lid, I am glad you say just what you think. I shall have the less delicacy in explaining my purpose;" then changing his iranical tone for a sharp, decisive one, he continued:

"You thought we met for the first time when I killed the panther, but you were in error. I had often met and visical you while in New York. You look surprised, yet nevertheless its true. I was Warne McIntyre. I loved you from the first with all the fervor of a man's first deep love, and I told you as much. You rejected my suit—indeed, you were but a school-girl then—yet in such a manner that I did not despair. Then you left the city. For two years I could not find where you spent your summers. Then, having found it necessary to leave New York very suddenly, I accidentally followed you to where you had removed, and to my great joy, as well as surprise, found that you were a close neighbor of mine. For I frankly admit I am the leader of a band of—robbers, as you would term them. 'Road Agents' sounds far more pleas to you my ears.

Well, I thought I would try my luck once more, under the nom de guerre of Captain Hart Toulmin, and you are aware of the result. Hel not that fool live I when he so not have been dead with the rest, my plans would not have been changed. Still, it is only a little more trouble, the result will be just the same. "You may not be aware of the fact, but you are the heiress of immens; we did. I have said that I love you. So I do, fervently, but, rest assure I, that were you a penniless girl, I should never have mentioned or thought of the word marriage in connection with your name. But you would have been mire all the same. With this fortune I can 'retire from pable lie die,' and on the continent I can live the life I was intended for.

"Your father has the power of willing it away, you will say. But he will not have the chance. If he proves obstincte, an Indian raid, a little powder, lead and fire, will seale the entire matter, and Ireton be only one more border to an the less. You may say that the marriage will not be legal without your consent, and that will never be given. Parden, if I contradict you. That also can be provided for. Two persons can be abducted as well as one, and when you see the loved forms of your parents writhing at the tortures: ike, I think you will condescend to speak that little word, you. Do you understand me?" he uttered, in a smooth, oily tone, then resumed:

"I say, when you see your aged parents writhe, and hear their grouns and shricks when their finger-nails are torn off; when the skin yields before the red-hot point of a knite, and is torn off in strips with the bullet-molds fresh from the fire; when you see the splinters, soaked in flat, thrust into their limbs and then set on fire; when you see this, I say, and other moles of torturing equally as pleasant, I do not think you will in sleete long before you say the little word that gives me a lively tride and a king's treasure," concluded the monster, as he drew rain and checked his horse down to a walk.

Jeste did not reply; she could not. She feared to trust her torgre to utter the words that almost choked her, lest she sould after her releatless captor so greatly that he would fire this plans and sacrifice her then and there. She had east to struggle; it was useless. But she did not despair, and in brain was busy. She felt assured that her friends, infirmed by Spincer, had taken the trail, and thought they call in the far behind. She by passively, but her half-call eyes noted every object upon the route.

It was after sundown when they reached the river so often alluded to, and Toulmin halted upon its back, both to re the horse and appease his own hunger. Jessie accepted the cold meat and cornective that he offered her, for she felt the need of something to sustain her strength.

She saw that he did not intend to pause long, for the co-conterments were left on the horse as he eagerly copped to rich, juicy grass that plentifully bordered the storan. As Jessie dispatched her homely food, her eyes were fixed up on the beautiful form of the iron-gray steed, and then a wild hope flashed across her mind, but she conceded the conversive start she had given by turning half-way around and glascing at the outlaw. He was reclining upon his back, with his gaze long upon the sky overhead, and phecidly smoking a pipe. But she saw that her movement had caught his car, and that he was listening intently.

What had given birth to the hope—a wild, chimerical one, yet still a hope—was this: The horse was not to harely lating too well trained to stray, and, in feeding, had entered a hellow, a depression in the prairie. This ran but a short district, then sloped to the common level. The animal was not standing close to one side of this, so that his back was not more than a foot and a built above the edge. The sale and her britle still remained in place, with the exception of the lift. That was hanging from its mouth, so as to allow the horse to eat freely.

What was to prevent her from mounting him and floring? To be sure a ballet sped faster than a borse, but would be shoot? She did not know, but resolved to risk it. She exact but meet death, and to remain as she was, in the power of him who had so coolly acknowledged he was a robb react murderer, was infinitely worse.

Fearing to lose a moment, she turned quickly are and, we has if by accident, knocked over the tin cup of water that some near by. With an exclamation of impatience she picker, ap the cup, and rose to her fact. To dmin rased imaself up on one cloow, and asked her what she wanted.

- " A drink of water; this is all gone."
- "I will get it for yen," he replied, having down his pape.
- ened down to the shore, where she took a hearty draught

Then stooping, she began to wash her hands and face, but it was done in order that she might see what Toulmin was done in order that she might see what Toulmin was done go and to gain time. He had sunk back upon his elbow, and ing an falling his pipe, but with his gaze fixed upon Jessie. At other gamee showed her that the horse was in a favorable position.

She dured not linger longer; so, refilling the cup, she slowly stated back, gradually edging nearer the horse. Then dropping the cup she sprung upon his back, and striking him violatly with the long reins, darted away upon the back-trail like an arrow.

The outlaw seized his rifle and half leveled it, but then dropping the weapon he caught up the ivory whistle that hung around has need, and blew a long, shrill blast.

Jessie was urging on her iron-gray, and had begun to think her escape was assured, but when the sound of the call was hear it the is iso turned with a will neigh and sped back toward its master, despite all her efforts to the contrary. Finding to at some could not turn or check him, Jessie threw herself to a the soile. Lucking the grass was high and dense, and some a point injury, but as she regained her feet and turned to fly, a so that may have upon her shoulder, and she was once more a captive.

To make the not utter a word, but led her back to where the reason was standing, and then mounted, litting her before lim. He entered the water a few paces, then heading upser and, sufficed the animal to pick his own way. They rode chant limitation of a several miles, until they reached a point opinite the timber that the outlaws and their Indian allies use has a covert the succeeding day, from which they dashed out in a the little had of whites, as already narrated. Then I may all do his horse from the water and rode into the wall will be found a spot that suited his fancy, when he dismounted.

He first drew a cold of stranger of from the soldie bags attached to his saddle, and qui welling Jessie, said, in a cold tone:

"I reget exceedingly that I am obliged to bind you for the night, but you have proven yourself to be such a prompt and what walk person, that I have no other resource. I am too much fatigued to keep watch over you all night, and besides I believe we decided to dispense with ceremonies. So hold out your hands."

Under this new ignominy Jessie nearly broke down, but calling to her ail her womanly pride, she silently obeyed the order. The same thing was done to her feet, and then Toximia left her, to attend to his horse. Tying him near by, the outlaw cut a quantity of tender boughs for him to eat, removing the saddle, but leaving the bridle in place, excepting the bits.

Then returning, he tossed a blanket over Jessie, and scenring the loose ends of the two cords to his arm, hald down and soon went to sleep.

Jessie passed a miserable, sleepless night, for the cor is had been drawn so tightly as to stop the circulation of blood in her limbs, but her pride and hate would not allow her to awaken To dmin, although, by so doing, this would have been remedied. It was a long, long night to her, and when day dawned she halled the change with a feeling of relief.

In a short time they were again en route, as d several miles were possed over in comparative silence. Then Touhain soldenly drew rein and bulled. Far ahead of them was a large body of horsemen, and from their course it was plain they would not pass far from where he then stood.

Dismounting, he caused both horse and captive to knowl down where the grass would cover them. But his precasion was needless, for as they drew nearer he recognized a partien of his own band, and remounting, spuired toward the party.

As he met them they uttered three hearty cheers, thes betraying what they really were, instead of what they some i, for no Indian ever emitted the hourse, wild "whooray" that rung upon the air. Still, there were a few Cheyennes among the band. The true sayage sat in silence.

Toulmin directed them to amborsh in the grove of trees where he had passed the night, and upon no account to all ow the pursuers to escape them. And had they followed his directions, remaining within cover of the trees, and allowed the whites to follow the trail as it had from the river to the note, not one of the party would have escaped death or capture. What the result was we have already seen.

Then the outlaw and his captive role on at a steady trot, and in due course of time the Brack Halls were seen in the distance. These do not derive their name from any unusual productive in the name and color of the soil, as might be inclined but because they are covered with a dense growth of stant it, dark-green colors, which, at a distance, appear lanck. Hence the name, "Brack Hills."

As they to be along, Toulmin pointed out several objects of indices, cit., r for their curious formation or the legends attaced to them, and in the distance, a chain of the Rocky Mondia. Then leaving the prairie, they entered a narrow collection wills of which were nearly perpendicular, and a tile similar et high. Toulmin explained to Jessie that this was the chaif trail that led to the robbers' stronghold, and that when dury r from this direction was apprehended, men were statemed upon either side of the blaff, with enormous stones to real down upon the hords of those who strove to enter.

After some time spent in winding through the defiles and crossing ridges, in such a zigzag manner that Jessie, who had end avored to remember every landmark and turn, grew bewill red and give up the attempt in despair, Tordmin drew i in at some little distance from a towering rock which appeared to entirely bar the way.

The a he uttered the shrill chatter of a red fox squirrel, closely followed by the pictoing scream of the black hawk. In a rament the yelping bark of the covote came in reply, and then the ordaw leader flew a peculiar quavering blast up a his whistle; when a rough, ditty looking man stepped out to a the rock and a branced to take the horse.

From the rick, we said, and literally he did so. There had been a small hole in the lower portion of it, which had been ending I by the Road Agents to the size of a common door, had a justice as cavern with a dozen or more apartimeter, fished by the hand, of Nature. To screen this from inverse, a door had been manufactured from board and cantagers, planted and covered with fine sand, and so fitted into the agent rate that the uninitiated eye would fail to discover the entrance, unless suspicion were aroused and the face of the rock sounded.

But a grund was posted at the entrance night and day, and from minute holes in the door, commanded a fair view of the defile for some distance. Unless a person, in approaching, persod beyond a certain point, and correctly gave the signals, he was to be treated as an enemy. If more than one, notice was to be given to that portion of the band within, and such measures taken as were most beneficial to the band in general. Owing to these precautions, the secret of the cave had hever been discovered, or at least was never divulged.

Carefully litting the screen, Toulmin entered, leading Jessie. The darkness was intense, contrasted with the clear similing at they had just left, and Jessie shrunk back, with the dread common in such cases; the fear of coming in violent contact with some hard obstacle. But Toulmin appeared well acquainted with the locals, and led the way without hesitation.

After several abrupt turns, and having apparently travers of a considerable distance, they beheld a faint light, and the sound of many voices in revelry. A few moments brought them to the edge of a large apartment, and Toulmin signed for Jesle to observe the picture before her.

It was a will, picturesque scene that she beheld as her eyes grew accustomed to the light. Extending the entire length of the room were two rough tables that fairly ground belough the articles piled upon them. The virials were in processon, although the meal was nearly finished. The service was not-ley and varied—wooden, pewter, delf and china ware, interspersed with an occasional piece of silver, standing before some bundit who loved display better than the money the bullion would bring were it melted and sold.

But Jessie's eyes did not linger upon these things. Around the table were seated men and women, laughing, singing, outing and carousing. Women in form, but ah, what were they in disposition and heart?

And yet they had been, some of them at least, as pure and innocent as the one who now stood observing them. Some had married the man of their choice, only to be dragged down to his degraded level. Others had not that excase or considerion. They were the virtims of some border rad, or a night attack upon some emigrant-train, then conveyed here. The result was but natural. They plunged into every excess, and rushed to strong drink to drown memory.

40 .

And not a few of them had become more corrupt if possible that the men. When a new captive was brought in, they call not rest mail sie was down to their own low depth.

Reference of a distorted imagination; it is distorted in a life. The characters given are real, and I "noth in the property of a malice."

The appropriate two slighted with lumps filled with the fat of will green, seeped to the rough uneven ceiling, or set upons the projecting below of the sides. The walls were received to be a low of the sides. The walls were received to be and garments of every size and simple with a received to be read other more peaceful implements with a right of the rail there. Rights and muskets, spears, hows not arrows were staked along the base, while in one corner were huge piles of skins and furs.

Near the wave set of a runther of women, whose dusky sting a filter by denote a precisioned them Indians. Their leads that I has been were gathered near the end of the table, will attention.

It was a will, startling seems, and Toulmin felt the hand to have all object tremble and grow cold. He was about to stap for a later the norm, when the sound of lond, excited works at the apposite endoures tell is attention, and he turned just to the to see a large hade as it go amount in the light, and it so it is was it aid to the hilt in an Indian's throat.

He and the maniferenthe body raffin who still classed to well a will have it, or the unreleved man's communicated to regulate, who trembled to be in the last pair before the calprit, who trembled to be in the last pair before his community.

"Harm a Musican, what is the meaning of this? Have you fired of lite that you draw blood within the cave?"

growled the outlaw.

"No maker. You have broken the law and must pay the law in. Y. Are you mady?" coldly answered Teulmin, drawing a revolver and cocking it.

no hope of escape.

"Yawden, I pers resty. Shoot!" he cried, and drawing himself up, lecked his leader boldly in the face.

"I hate to do it, Muskau, but the rules must be kept. You are a brave man, and none better when you let liquor alone. But you must die. If I didn't punish you the Indians would, and that would be the means of breaking up the entire band," and the deadly revolver was slowly leveled.

Not a feature moved or a nerve quivered as the man stared full into the dark tube that was to send him all unprepared and with a heavy black load of sins upon his soul, before his Creator. Then the trigger was drawn, the bullet crashed through his brain, and without a moan or gasp the breathless clay tell forward at the feet of his leader and slayer.

Coldly ordering two of the men to remove the body, Toal-min returned to where the horror-stricken Jessie stood, and without a word led her through the apartment, taking a lamp to light the way. Passing through two smaller rooms, he paused before a strong door, made from thick oaken slabs, and hung upon heavy iron binges. This he opened with a key taken from an inner pocket and motioned his captive to enter.

As she did so, he told her that she should not be disturbed until morning, and that she would find the necessary toilet articles, as well as refreshments within. Then the huge door closed with a clang, and she heard the key first turned, then withdrawn, and the echoing sound of his footsteps as the outlaw leader returned the way he had come.

CHAPTER VI.

"BLACK JIM."

SEVERAL days after the events just recorded, the outlaw leader mounted his horse, "Storm Cloud," as a fanciful Indian belonging to the band had named the noble iron-gray, and rode through the defile, out upon the prairie. He was ill at ease, and had good cause for so being.

The band he had left to capture the whites who were in pursuit of him, had returned unsuccessful, and with nearly one-third of their number either killed or disabled, while the whites he lescaped. Then he had learned that Wyvil Moss had vasied Fort Riley, going from thence to Fort Leavenwarth on a mission easily divined. These facts, joined to a growing ill spirit ction among his men, caused the dark scowl that rested upon his features.

He make if the saly along, apparently without aim or object, allowing his in use to choose its own course. But he was described to be rubly awakened, for, as his horse drew near a charp of will some, that stood a short distance from a good-sized note, the dark form of a man sprung from the covert and yelled:

"Holl en dar, you mister feller; jest stop right whar you is. 'Fore de Lord, if you don't, I'll pull de snapper on ye. I ain't a-foolin' now; I will fo' suah."

To thain was taken by surprise, for his thoughts were far away; still he was not alarmed. His heart did not beat the faster or his bronzed check blanch. He had too often met dath at arm's length and come off the victor, for that. But he obeyed the command, or, rather, the horse stopped of its own accord.

His eyes swept over the person who had thus challenged him. As the speech declared, it was a negro, or more like a through arter blook. His features were rather well formed and not of the exaggerated type, and his skin shone a rich nutbrown through the rents in his garments. An old slouched lat was pushed back from his face, revealing a crop of black, the garring hair that adorned his occiput. In the belt at his was were stuck a long knife and a couple of valuable revolvers. In his hambs, and leveled full at the head of the outlaw, was a heavy ritle of medium caliber.

" Git eff 'm dat ar' hoss, I tole ye, less I blow a hole fru' ye qui ker'n Heltrin," reiterated the darky.

"Way, what do you want with my horse?" queried Toulm", to gain time, as he planned how to dispose of this traditions on temer.

"Yah! yah! yah! I guess dat hoss dar b'long to dis nig-

"Found him with me on his back?" at the same time

"Yeh. S'pese I done foun' 'em both. Take de animile; let you go of you don't make a diss. If yo do, den—I tole ye git down from dat ar' less! Git down double-quick. Is got de ager in my fo'finger an it'll git ter shakin' purty so n. Has de cramp like, ye see," he added, squinting along the leveled rifle.

"Why, you fool, there's no cap on your gun!" crisd Teulmin, drawing his revolver; and, as the U.ck lowered the muzzle to examine the tube, the cutlaw spurred to his side, and thrusting the muzzle of his pistol under the negro's nose, laughed:

"Wilo's got the trumps now, woolly, I'd like to know? The next time a main tells you there's no cap on your rifle, pull the trigger, anybow. You'll find out as quick that way."

The negro stared in amazement for a moment, then drop ping his rate and falling upon his knees, he clasped his hands and begged for mercy.

- "Fo' de Lord's sike, mas'r, don't kill de poor ole nizzer, please don't! He's on'y jest a-famin,' he war; dich't mean naffin. Jes' wanted to see how brave ye war. I'll sw'ar dat's all; 'll take my solumeholly oaf on a stack o' rifmeticks as high 's a be in-pole, dat's all. Don't kill me, an' I'll be yer servint for obber an' obber. I'll cook for ye, do any t'mz, of ye'll on'y jes' let me lib a leetle w'ile lorger," pleased the darky, as he dodged his head first from one side to the other, then reversing the motion, trying to avoid the hollow tube that followed every movement, and looking so ludicrously terrified that Toulmin could not restrain a kanch.
- "But tell me what you were up to; what you stopped me for," he said.
 - "Won't ye git mad of I tole ye?" hesitated the darky.
 - "Mal? No, but I will unless you tell a straight story."
- "Well, den, I'll tole ye all how it comed about," replication the duky. "Ye see, de Mas'r Whitcheal, dat own led me, he goes out to Californy an' tuck me long wid him. He gob me wages, an' we dug lots an' lots o' yaller steff 'at he said was gold. After he get all he wanted we started long o' a wagin train for hum.
- "Free or four days ago we left de train an' struck on alical, so 's to git dar sooner. Now, I bin t'inkin' a heap 'best dat ar' money, I hed, an' mas'r he made it wusser, 'case he kept a-talkin' all de time 'bout how he'd splurge out on dem ar' pals o' dest, when he dene got ham. An' what hosses, an' has 's, an' habitin' ressers he'd buy; an' how he'd git drunk e' ap day ar' might too, an' hew many niggers he'd hey, an' sie class, till it 'peared like I'd go crazy.

"Den one time I tought as I'd digged most ob de gol' dat I 'd set the tree when we done got hum. An' so I up an' ax I him, w'u'd he? Lord, ye'd jest orter heard him cass! 'U se to Mass, of he didn't noke de a'r smell ob sul; hur an' hi set and he sa'ared so orful. Den he knocked me off ob de hass, it will. But he didn't do it ag'in. 'Ca'se why? I top an' blowed de hull top o' his head off, I did, dat same night.

"Da I hill his bely, shot his hoss, an' left like de debbie we satt rime," his el the negro, his eyes glowing like thre-

Lais, and a fi ree so wl distorting his features.

"But where is your herse now, and why did you stop me?" asked Toulmin.

- Delta strowed me yes'day," continued the negro, "an' git clar off. Den I kept on walkin' an' wa'kin' till I done git by ar; din I shepe I has night ober dar," motioning town by a reserve "I sie'd ye a comin, an' dat ye had a mighty first has, so I t'orgat dat I'd bary it for a hottle w'ile," in an are i the larky, as if for fall of giving offerer.
- "Dit where is the gold?—have you got it about you?"
 quit I Te dmin, in a careless tone.
- "No, sth: I done hid dat what no passon 'cept dis chile his if his fish it," replied the darky, with a canning lear.
- "Nover mil I that now. Where were you going if you had got my horse?".
 - " Fer de States."
- "Why, you foll, you would be suspected and hung in less than a world. No; you come with me. I'll show you some that, all where you can citier to the or spend money as fast as you pleas. If you go to the cities, you'll be hung, so your colf charm is to j in my band. We make our own haws, and to be inglished on the other side. We have plenty to cut, drial, and little to do. Money is like water with use And there are we men, too; thick, red, or white, just as you prefer. What do you say?—will you j in us?"

" Ain't ye jest a-foolin' dis chile, now ?" queried the negro.

" No, I am in earnest and mean just what I say."

"Den I's wid ye. I'll jine ye an' t'ank ye in de barg'in," was the eager reply.

"It's fortunate for you that you do. Had you said no, you'd not be alive now," laughed the outlaw. "Well, chony —by the way, what is your name?"

"Sim-Simuel, sah; dat's all."

"Well, Sim, are you known to anybody in Ireton?"

"Wha's dat-eat'n what?" asked Sim.

"Never mind, but you'll do. Come with me," and he turned his horse's head toward the cave, closely followed by Sim.

The latter appeared to be a very clumsy person indeed, if we may judge from his actions. First he stumbled and knocked off his hat, then picked it up, dropped it once more, and ended by pulling it far down over his eyes.

Toulmin appeared to fully trust the negro, and openly led the way to the entrance of the concealed cave, after giving the necessary signals. The door closed behind them, and neither reappeared throughout the day.

On the succeeding day, however, about noon, the negro stepped from the cave, and threading the intricate path with a readiness that proved how thoroughly he must have noted the windings on the one occasion he had traversed it, followed the trail left by the robber captain and himself on the preceding day.

As he neared the motte, he paused and imitated the quavering caw of the rain-crow, then listened intently. The shrill, piercing whistle of the "Big Hawk" cchoed through the woods.

As if relieved from some anxiety, the darky glided forward and entered the "prairie island." In a few moments he was met by two white men, and then the trio plunged deeper into the woods.

The latter were old Hank Triplett and Floyd Spencer, while the "negro," as the reader has doubtless suspected, was the guide, Zenas Gale.

As they seated themselves upon the trunk of a fallen tree, Spencer speke:

"Well, Zene, what have you found out-what success? Have you seen Miss Jessie?"

"G'Illia' turkeys' I've found out a heap; ef I hain't, call rea male! Ye kin braz high onto that hand, ye kin, an' pull in the chips like fan, I tell ye i. Wagh!' returned the guide, excitedly.

"Spiratin' crues!" continued he. "I've pulled the wool over Stadley's eyes, j'inch his band; found out the signs an' sime is to enter the hele; counted his men an' 'zamined his west as; to each whisky, an 'bove all see'd Miss Jessie, feastways torked to her."

"Yandil?" exclaimed Spencer. "Is she well and safe?

What did she say?"

"Jenjin' juckrabbits, man, you're wusser'n a Pinto squaw, you is, an' that's needless. 'Case why? her tongue's tied in the millional runs at both cends! I couldn't answer all them there are juit the righ by sun-up. Wal," he added, "let me start at the tigh cent o' the trail, an' I'll teller it cl'ar up.

"Ye sould how I hamboozled the polecat yender, an' got 'im to I time jine his band. So, he takes me to the all-firedest, cut st hole-in-the wall that I over see'd, an' interduced me to his tillers as one o' them. They didn't see through the willn't stain no mote'n he did, 'at I've got on my hile.

"Take the trial to primp me, an' I answered so's to please him mightly, tellin' more lies inside o' that hour 'n I kin answer fer if I live a hunderd y'ars.

The soid, or that he did, which 'mounted to the same thing, in the war jist the filter he wanted, an' then he let me inter a secret. 'Pears like than's another feller as wants to be hypthin, an' the hand's bout evenly divided. Then this 'ere filters in Miss Jessle, an' to k a hankerin' arter her too. This take I takes up to 'y con illable, ye see; trappin' beavers, yas!

"So be off is me big pay of I'd keep good guard onto the dero's remark at he'd get a ged prisher. Shilin' micks, all he's my gizzed jump of armp intermy throat? If it doler's call me a massive is wealt! Didn't I say gos powerful quick? Oh no, I guess not!

I saw'd Miss Jessie; an' arter he'd gone I told her to pucket up; thet fri'nds war nigh an' w'u'd free her 'fore long. It 'peared like she'd go crazy she war so glad, an' I trimbled fer fear some pusson 'd h'ar her. But she kinder simmered down, an' then I tole her all thet hed happined sence she war tuck, by whisperin' through the keyhole, an' how, yest as som as her dad got hyar with men, we'd take the she ang," concluded Gale.

"But can it be taken?" asked Floyd.

"Crickets an' hoppergrasses, yas," replied Zene. "We'll jist wait ontell than's nobody in the pass, then the men kin stry back o' the ben't, out o' sight, w'ile two or three gi'n the signal, an' w'en the door is opened, they kin grup these on guard. A knife-thrust ends them. Then the rest is easy. For most o' the Agents git drunk every night, or purty n'arly so."

" How did you manage to get off to-day, Gale? Won't be suspect you?"

"Nary suspect! Ye see I watch at night an' am off in the daytime. Then I told him I'd like to go an' git the gold I'd hid—what I took from my mas'r when I rubbed him out, ye know," laughed the scout. "When I go back I'd tell him I kuchi't find it; then I'll hev a good excuse for meetin' ye a, in afore long. D'ye unnerstan'?"

As Gale did not wish to go back to the cave before night, so as to be able to tell a plausible tale about his vain search for the hidden treasure, they lighted their pipes, and prepared to pass the intervening hours as pleasantly as possible.

CHAPTER III.

" FROM THE PRYING-PAN INTO THE FIRE."

MATTERS were, as Zene Gale had expressed it, considerably mixed up at the cave. There was one man, a will, reckless, dare-devil young fellow, name! Wolfe Eyre, or, as it was tyndered by his commeles, "Wolf Eye," who had risen to be seened in command. But with this he was not content. In-ordinately ambitious, he possessed qualities that, had be folland politics in a wider sphere, would have insured him suc-But he preferred being a robber in name as well as reality.

Thus, by that crimg each man's peculiar hobby, he succeeded in becoming a great favorite with the unijority. And now he ralleame est op b'y and demanded a new election. In this he was supported by his partisans.

Sol, Toulmin Leel his stanch friends, generally the offer and an reexprineed." Agents," and sought to temporize. He was playing a rachigh stake, and that won, he was ready to a direct Bet, multi was, he must retain his position, for were have that de his rival supplant him, the next step were i be to apprepriate the fair captive.

The still end was inclined to rush metters, and Jessey, when she harned from Zene Gale the state of attairs, was 20 ally alarmed. It had been determined that no aftempt at escare should be made until the time the cave was to be attacked; but this altered matters, and they feared that Toulni. wall contrive some print for the removal of the captive to a to resect to place. At length the time came.

To animal deposite I the evening before, not intending to r : nle ren on of the succeeding day, and as he the ren, his the cities a rand real rand given him the key of the prison, so 'a. .' a.e. (!! say it is wants of the captive; and they i. . : :: . . d to t. .e a Nuntuge of this fact.

Il a r that metair a betare daylight, Jessie robed herself in ti. . -s of an Indian squaw that Gale had procured, and the large banket shreading her form as well as features, - . I i well the secont from her prison.

G refre on belily, clearly followed by his trembling companies and the year of the cave entrance with no fairthe receipt a than a f w rade jests, that were answered by n - . which is the dispulse I sent The door was opened 1 . '. in by the grand, as the darky slipped a gold-piece into are and, tening him not to tell any person where they had gone.

Operated signs, the follows quickened their steps, and Leteral toward there the the two scours were concented. These were siredly infilmed of the Centemplated escape, as Gale had left a horse in their charge for the use of Jessie. Spencer and Triplett were not to accompany them, as it was necessary some one should remain behind to acquaint the party under Wyvil Moss of the cave's situation.

Gale had conducted Triplett to the point from whence he could see the entrance, one night, and Floyd stayed from choice. Until the slayer of his kindred should meet his merited fate, there was scant room in his heart for aught else.

With a few hasty instructions and words of parting, the scout led the way from the grove, and the fugitives set their faces toward Fort Riley. Gale feared to return direct to Ireton, for he knew that the pursuit would be hot and heavy, and that the village would be the first point aimed for, as he did not fear that their trail would be followed, for the prairie was covered with intersecting tracks, of every grade of freshness.

His principal, and, indeed, only fear was, that they might charge upon some roving band of either Indians, or of those belonging to the band of which he was considered a worthy member. In the latter case he knew that his treachery would be speedily exposed, and then his life would not be worth an hour's purchase.

But, his was not a nature given to glocmy thoughts, and banishing them from his mind, he rattled on in a strain peculiar to himself, in order to allay the misgivings that he knew Jessie could but entertain. Still, he was note the less watchful, and keeply scrutinized the prairie in every direction, but not a living person did they see, and when the sun told the noon hour, they paused by the side of a well-wooded stream, and were soon busily engaged in discussing the cold venison and corn-cakes that Gale had provided from the robbers' larder.

Their horses had been hardly pressed, and Gale knew they must be allowed at least an hour's rest and feed, it they did not want to be left atot, or tile broken-down horses. The heat was intense, and they had maintained a swift gall p since daylight, in their eagerness to leave the cave for behind them. For the fact of their escape could not long remain unascevered, and then we do come swift and het parsuit.

Then the horses were again mounted, and the journey re-both busy with their own thoughts. Jessie was pondering over her one-time lover's baseness, while Gale was equally absorbed.

Two hours had passed since leaving the creek where they had rusted, and the gallop had not been broken save for a few minutes at a time. As they rose over a high ridge in the prairie, Gale uttered a curse at his own stupidity, and has ily retreated. But the mischief was done, and he could hear the fant chorus of yells that rose upon the air.

What he had seen was a considerable body of Indians, who were riding slowly toward the fugitives as they crossed the ridge. That he had been seen, he knew full well; the yells teld him that, and that there was but one hope of escape Perl. 13 the savages' horses were wearied also, and would not be able to overtake him. If the chase could be protracted until night, he felt assured that he could mislead them in the darkness.

These revelations this hed through his mind in a moment, as he caught the reins of the horse ridden by Jessie, and turning to the right, urgod them forward at the top of their speed. They were both noble brutes, as had been pretty well tested, but Gide know they could not keep up their present rate of speed for many more miles; but his object was to test the freshness and quality of the horses in pursuit before he revealed his own weakness by slackening up.

He is all nearly two miles the start, and unless the horses in pass it were comparatively fresh, he thought he could stave them off until night.

He was documed to disappointment, however, for, as the Indians or so I the ridge, he could note the long, springing leaps, the swift, regular strokes that told of unwearied limbs. With a low but none the less bitter curse, the scout urged on their jaded horses.

He glaced about and saw no hope there. A deep secul correct his features, and he appeared revolving some plot in his mind. Then he spoke to Jessie.

"Jest look allind ye, ma'am, an' see how fast them impage eve level; us. Our horses ar' purty night played, while there is fresh as a driey. They cain't help but catch us afore long, an—" he situtingly said Gale.

"Speak out plainly, Mr. Gale," interrupted Jessie, seeing the worthy guide's dilemma.

"Wal, I war kinder fear'd thet you'd 'ither think I'd gone clean crazy, else j'ined them that purps. Wimmen is mighty queer critters anyhow," apologized the scont. "What I menut was jest this. To pull up an' s'render 'thout any more fuss. They'll be easier on us then, an' p'r'aps we kin manage to bamboozle 'em some way, an' gi'n 'em the slip after all. But it's jest as you say, yes or no. They'll hev us, anyhow," concluded the scout.

e Follow the course you deem best," replied Jessie, while a cold thill of horror and despoir crept over her as she heard the blood cardling yells of the savages who were gaining on them hand over hand.

The guide did not hesitate, but checking his horse he role slowly back toward the enemy. A murmur of surprise tan from mouth to mouth as they beheld this action, and they pulled up their horses, while several of their braves stood exect upon their backs and keenly scrutinized the prairie leyon!. Then, as it satisfied, they again advanced, and the next moment the fugitives were inclosed within a dusky circle of point-bedaubed Sioux.

The dispuise I scout was treated with far more consider disputation would have been shown him had his skin been its natural color, for the red-men, knowing how the negro is downtrodden (pparently) by the whites, feel a natural sympology for them. And in their hands, at least, it is better to be black than white.

His arms were taken from him, but he was not bound, the circle of braves being deemed sufficient security for his god beliavior.

Just before sunset a motte was reached by the side of a small creek, and preparations were begun for excumping. Sword of the braves were dispatched in quest of game, which they could obtain pleaty of food, the rich, succeleut grass laing pleatful along the creek.

Gale waited in considerable anxiety to see in what nation the savages would secure their prisoners for the night. For prisoners they were, he felt assured, although they were seemlugir free and unrestrained. He had determined to escape during the night, if possible; for every yard traversed by them will the red-skins was so much out of their way, and would Live to be retriced before they were in security.

The unite keeply noted the manner and exact place where the hars were staked out, and more particularly the two that he had mentally decided were the lest. On the back of these he knew that they would be safe from pursuit the moment they were out of ritle range.

The land research, having been successful in luring a lerd of antelope within range, and then securing four. Gale pertook hear ily of the tender, juicy meat and Jessie did the same on a hint from him that she would require all her strength and energy before morning.

At legath the savages legan to think of shep, and while s not believe zen rolled thenselves up in their blankets and strice el then selves eut, others, among whom was Fox-Eye, the Chip wa Sloux, consulted together in low tenes. But, although Gill could be tered a word, he was confident that they were discussing what disposition should be made of his companion and himself.

This was apparently settle!, for the chief arose, and speciling a comple of blu kets upon the ground, near the fire, infrom I Jessie that she was to rest there. Atashight ned from Z ..., she took her place, and helf reclining, drew one bhat let or rher to shill her firm from the heavy night-lews. Then Gille to dt his position near har, trembling lest he should not be a low I the use of his limbs. But he was not disturbed.

A namber of the Signx went out to see if their horses were s vie, while the others by down to sleep, in which they were joined by the rest as they returned.

The dieg is descent contiously perced out from beneath his ci - legalis, and noted with joy that there was no one on g .: l. But he could be relly be live this fleet, and raising his Lead, leadly scrutinized the surrounding shalows. The result was the same.

The here and the firms of these lying around the fire, be that a sof no use, and he cursed his folly in not doing sol from when he know that all were present.

Several Lours slowly passed on, and the fire had nearly expired. Gale knew that the time had come for action, and cautiously whispered to his companion. She was awake and ready to do her part. The scout speeddy selected his weapers from the pile, and that done, there was nothing to detain them.

Taking Jessie by the hand, and instructing her to proceed, the gride led the way over the prostrate forms of the Si ax, and they reached the edge of the little glade in safety. When the verge of the timber was gained, Zene told Jessie to a wait him there while he secured the horses.

Then creeping silently to where the two animals were pickcted that he had selected in his mind as the ones he should borrow, the scout stooped and began loosening the repes, chuckling heartily to himself as he thought what fools the Sioux were, and picturing in glowing colors their rage and chaptin when they learned the loss of their two best horses, as well as the unceremonious departure of their guests

But he laughed too soon, as he learned to his discust, for a brawny pair of arms clasped his, drawing them belied his back, thus rendering all resistance vain. Gale cursed batterly as he realized how he had been outwitted, and then he was led, together with Jessie, back to the camp-fires, which were replenished by the savages who he thought were so somely sleeping, where he was haited with jeers and peals of laughter.

The crestfallen scout did not reply to their taunts, and then he was bound securely with strips cut from the antelepedates, and left to ponder over his misfortunes. Jessie was treated with more leniency, but still her hands were bound, while the end of the thong was secured to the wrist of Fox Eye. As for Gale, he could move neither hand nor foot.

CHAPTER VIII.

SCOUTING INTO A QUANDARY

For some little time after the departure of Jessie and the guide, Triplett and Spencer remained silently within their covert. Although he did not say as much. Triplett was ill at ease, and flageting around, at length attracted Floyd's attention, who said:

- "What's the matter now, Hank? Any thing wrong?"
- "Gobs," was the terse reply.
- " Well, what is it?" asked Floyd, rather impatiently.
- "Jest this. What on 'arth be we stayin' hyar fer?" replied the scout.
- "Whiting for Mr. Moss to arrive with the soldiers, of course."
- "I know t'z', but her ye any pertick'ler fancy to make a visit to yender hornets' nest afore they gits hyar? 'Case I hain't."
- "What do you mean? Confound it, man, can't you speak out, without beating round the bush for an hour?" impatiently demanded Spencer.
- any legar fer it," coolly replied Hank.

Then he centinued, in a sharp, decisive tone, that showed his mind was fully made up:

"I st an' fo'm st, the gd an' Zene hev got cl'ar. In constituy'll be missed, but, ef what he said was so, not much alore moon, cf any. Not ontil the king-pin gits back, 'tany rath. So much for so much. Then 's a sartinty, they is hered arter, 'cose he won't let a purty gal like Miss Jessie slip through his fingers after the trouble he hed to git her, 'thou he cain't help 'imself. An' now, young feller, ye sees what I mean.

"This hole 'll be s'arched one o' the fast things, fer the trail, of nothin' else. They'll know he must 'a' cooled the animile somether, 'ease when he left the cave he was on foot, likewise the gel; an' what so likely as hyar? It's next to the river, an' class by. They'll find the dead imp, an' then whar'll we be, of we stays hyar?' added the old scout.

"We must be we here, that's settled; but where shall we go?" replied Spencer.

We call the fur, 'case we must be 'round when the squire colors and all still word. This is my plan. We'll mount and travel, keep in this timer at ween us and the hills, 'till we cross rish at we'll. Then we'll turn and circle 'round to the hills,' and reads 'mong the cellers till our time comes."

As Spacer had no better plan in view, the two scouts prepared for departure. This was quickly accomplished, having only to slip the bits into their horses' mouths and secure the strips of antelope-meat that they had partially coned by drying in the sun during their stay at the motte, after solling it, leaving a supply in their saddle bags, brought from Ireton. Then, after a slight reconnoiter by Triplett, they rode from the grove on the side opposite the pass.

They rode at a rapid rate, for they knew that every moment they lingered upon the open prairie increased the risk of discovery. And a glimpse of one of them, caught by an outlaw, might frustrate their whole plot.

In about an hour the necessary detour was completed, and the foot of the hills safely reached without discovery. After some little time spent in the search, a snug covert for the horses was found, and they were secured within it, with a quantity of provender placed before them.

It was at the card of a slight ravine or defile, blocked by a huge overhanging rock, from whose rugged sides and front grew a tangled mass of stunted ceder and clastering vines. These hung low down, and aided by those upon the sides and level, formed a kind of room, dark even at midday. Not a glimpse of any thing within could be caught, unless the screen was litted and the intruder stepped inside. Hank was greatly pleased with his discovery, for he cared more for his horse, if any thing, than he did for himself.

Leaving them there, the two scouts cautiously made their way through the underbrush toward a high point from which they could have a fair view of the entrance to the cavern and of the surrounding country. This they had noted from the moste, so there was little fear of their going astray, or drawing too near the cave.

In due course of time they reached the decided point, and securing a seat where they would be comfortable, and at the same time have a fair view to the entrance of the cave, they resized themselves to the task of wairing and watching with the best grace they could summon. Had produce not find their smoking, they would have been perfectly contented, but they knew how far the pungent odor could be distinguished by the keen nostrils of an Indian, and feared the risk. To be sure it meight be attributed to an outlaw, if it was discovered, but there was too much at stake to venture.

The sun Ladje t passed the meridien, when a single horsem in was somapproaching the hills, at a swift, regular galicp. He is at the distance it could be told that the stud was a nor but one, and the rider on accomplished equestrian. The sends straight.

In a few minutes he drew rein at the lead, and appeared to the give the required signeds, but the distance was too for for the sijes to tell. Then a man appeared and took the horse, while Toulmin entered the cave.

During the read few minutes the secrets were chackling heatily as they pictured the rage and charrin of the robber, when he for I that his white as well as that his I had flown at a. B fore long they saw Toulmin emerge, tollowed by a crowled men, and could see him gesticulating as if in great anger.

Then they saw three savages dust away from the main by, and when clear of the defile, croach and appear to be searching for the trail of the facilities. One of the trio aft the chars and spell away toward the mette. The two spics charles i beautify as they predicted the trail would not be to be the problem of the trails would not be to be the trails remains in every direction.

"That't remainder of use, ye consumed fools, an' ye months as well live it up for a balljob, fast as last," muttered Trip-let, but his face instantly foll, and a shade of anxiety gathered over it.

"The lightnin', but I blideve it's us as is the cossel in is a reall. Sipon the fiber 'downs the horse that G is called is 'more than that telers? Won't be be like to know his own hoss's trail?"

" that have could that be aveib 12" replied Spencer.

"Hely health the older off of the asimal's hoofs. Wai, it could be a fine of the asimal's hoofs. Wai, it could be a fine of the asimal's hoofs. Wai, it could be a fine of the asimal's hoofs. Wai, it could be a fine of the asimal than the seconds watched the move-ments of those below in silence.

They could see men beinging forth horses from the lower one, that was used for a stable, all saidled and brilled ready for the road, and then two-thirds of the band mounted and appeared ready to move on at a moment's notice. Presently the trail-hunter was seen rapidly returning from the next, and the scouts knew that he had either discovered the ready taken by the fugitives, or had found the dead body of the Indian killed by Hank, when spying on the movements of Gale; perhaps both.

But they were not left long in ignorance. The scort called in his two fellows, who were still scarching the prairies, and the spies knew the trail had been discovered. As the three Indians appeared in view of the main body, they pured, and set up the long, mournful death-wail, telling but too plainly that the scalpless body of one of their comtades had been found.

Then Toulmin spurred forward, and apparently questioned the Indian. That he was satisfied with the report, the two spies plainly saw, for he waved his hand to his men and started at their head at full speed for the motte.

Several Indians went along more slowly, for they were on foot, and soon reappeared bearing the savere. For leveled the timber island were the outlaws riding in a close of mp, while at a little distance ahead glided the dasky, halt-note trail-hunters on foot, but still at such a pace that a steady god-lop was necessary to keep them within easy bailing distance of the band.

"It's a bad shake for the gal, of any thin' has happined out o' the way, for these imps 'd trail them through the air, e'cra'mest," muttered the old guide, with a dissatisfied air.

"But how do you know any thing has happened?" asked Spencer, a little uneasily.

"I don't know it; I on'y jest feel that away. 'Pe rs like sunkthin' war wrong. I feel it in my bones, like, an' that sign so cely ever fools me," replied Triplett. "But don't let's think about thet; 'twon't do any good. Leid, what a chaince we'd hev of the squire'd only come along after these fellers git back. Fust, we'd clean out them fell is a sis in the hole, then snipe up the rest as they come in. We con't do it jest as easy as fallin' off a log," he added, or that i stoody.

"What do you think is dealent; him?" questal F yl. "He should have been here two days ago, if no him ser, and had happened. If he don't come to-morrow, I, for one, and going to leave here, and see what I can do myself. We have found this nest of the scrpents, and if we don't scratch them it won't be my fault."

"P'r'us he cain't git nobody to come along wi' him," suggested Hank.

I have little four of that. He had plenty of money at his commonly and he is not the man to spare it in such a case. And with that, you know, a person can do almost any thing," replied Floyd.

They cording all the conversation for some time, as they had little four of caves troppers in the position they then occupied.

The hairs rolled on slowly enough to the two spies, without any event occurring to disturb them or arouse their emissity. The sin was near the horizon, not more than an hour high, when Spencer was seized with a fit of sneezing. In vain he strove to check it. He compressed his nostrils, and placed his hard over his mouth, but still the explosion would forth.

While he was wiping his streaming eyes, Hank uttered a low hiss, and half rising, bent his head to listen more intently. His ken car had cought a slight rustle among the cedars above them, but he did not know whether it was caused by a foe, or only by the rather fresh wind that had lately risen.

They were not kept long in suspense, for the shall, piercing war-whole of the Cheyennes peak I forth from the hill-top, and before they could rise to their feet, the for was upon them.

Literally so, in Triplett's case, for a huge, brawny Indian aligned full upon his shoulders. But, as the guide partially term I, he had caught a glimpse of the maneuver, and ducking his head, when the savage alighted he shook his body like a minimum earthquake, and the Cheyenne was tossed head-that ever the precipies on their front, where he met with no marry at the hours of the jagged rocks below, save a speedy and painless death.

Hark in I not sill himself of this enemy a moment too soon, for a loss street, he was Spencer borne to the ground by war all calless, while still others were descending from above.

Sail g his commule hars du combut, and knowing that he would be soon in the same condition if he remained, Hank now thought of escape. He stood near the path that wound around the hill. This was the only avenue left open. Discharging his pistols into the crowd, he rushed forward and knocked down one of them, a small man, with the pistol-hat. A bullet pierced his side, another gashed his check, while an arrow quivered in his shoulder. He caught up the senseless man, who, being a light weight, the sturdy guide flutg him over his shoulder, and bounded with frightful speed down the rugged pathway.

For a moment the outlaws stood astounded at this action, which was accomplished so quickly that they could not have prevented it had they tried to do so. Then they surged with wild yells of rage, after the daring spy.

The momentary hesitation of the outlaws, however, had given Triplett the start, an advantage they could not regain, despite all their efforts, and the guide reached the defile at the foot of the hill. Then they did what they should have dene before, and the bullets began to whistle after the fagitive. But he appeared to bear a charmed life, and sped on uninjured. Then the dull, peculiar thud of a bullet entering flesh was heard, and the captive Hank still held uttered a wild shrick of agony.

Triplett dropped the body and fled with increased speed. Nothing remained for it but simple fleetness of foot. It was a plain "stern chase," the walls of the precipice on either hand constraining his pursuers to follow directly in Triplett's footsteps.

He continued to gain upon them, and when he reached the spot where the horses were concealed, he was faily two handred yards ahead. Without stopping to replace the bits that 'hung from the horse's mouth, he leaped upon his steed, "Silver Hecks," and leading Spencer's horse, spurred out upon the prairie.

When at a little distance from the pass, he paused, and when the outlaws appeared, he uttered a defiant cry and turn', to a turned and galloped swiftly away. Pursuit was made, but I te in the night the Road Agents returned crestifien, having been completely foiled and distanced.

When Spencer regained his consciousness his arms were drawn back and platoned at the elbow, behind his back. Then he was dragged and pushed down the winding path, and conducted to the cave.

Entiring, they present through the same apartments as Toulmin dil with Jessie, and the captive was thrust into a dark hele, where he was left with his arms still bound. He staggered across the room and stumbled over a prostrate form, that, enatting a feeble groun, told him he had a companion in misery.

CHAPTER IX.

THE DEATH-SHOT.

The party under Teulmin made rapid progress upon the trail of the flightives, although their trail-hunters were upon flot. But, they were justly celebrated as runners, having of en served their tribe, the Cheyennes, in that capacity, and could cover more ground in a day, with less fatigue, than the generality of horses.

Then they were delayed but little by having to search for the trail. The speed at which Gale had traveled, as well as the nature of the ground, precluded any systematic attempt at brecking it. The result was that the Azen's traveled at a rail pace, but little if any slower than the twain they were hunting.

Todain was an a lept in prairie life, and he was far too warv to risk running his head into an ambush, or to come into collision with any fee that might be in their path without timely notice. To insure this he allowed one scout to gain at a 'v. . . . f over a mile, sen ling the most skillful and reliaire of the trib. This distance he was to maintain. A seccall was said about milway, while the third was kept at a hundred yards from the main party.

In this name of any enemy in from Then the certainty of keeping on the right trail was drill, ir simil one strey, the chances were that one of the others would be more successful.

Taus mile after mile was traversed, and the party did not halt until the shades of night had blotted the trail for the time being. Toulmin was sorely tempted to continue on by torchlight, but he did not dare do so. If an enemy were upon the prairie for miles around, the lights would attract them, and the distance gained by such means would not repay the risk; besides, the horses of his party were somewhat juded, and a night's work would untit them for any emergency that might arise at any moment.

At earliest dawn the scouts resumed the relative positions they had occupied before, and the cavalcade swept rapidly over the prairie, dashing the sparkling dew-drops right merrily from the long grass, and frightening the birds from their roos's. They broke their fast while in the saddle; time was too precious to waste.

The sun was not more than an hour above the eastern hills, when the most advanced scout was seen standing upon a high ridge of ground, and Toulmin dashed forward to ask the meaning. It lay before him as he followed the gesture of the savage. It was the point where the Sioux hall struck the trail of Jessie Moss and Zene Gale.

One glance showed him the whole circumstance, as well as if he had been an eye-witness to it. He saw where the fugitives had abruptly paused, then shot off at right-angles with the course they had been pursuing, and then their tracks were obliterated by the hoof-prints of the savages, thus plainly showing they had pressed hard after them.

A gleam of joy lit up his pallid countenance, for he saw that there was a hope of recapturing the maiden he had begun to fear was lost to him forever. The scouts told him, and he could see for himself, that his force was fully equal if had supperior to that of the new actors in the drama. He knew that the foe was of some Indian tribe, for had they been whites, the figitives would have sought their protection, rather than be fleeing from them.

Of what tribe they were he could not tell, but should they prove inimical he knew he could depend upon his followers, and had no fears for the result should they come to blows. On the other hand, were they peaceful, he could easily purchase Jessie from them.

These thoughts flashed through Toulmin's mind as the double trail was followed in the same order as before, save that the Level scout hel increased his lead a full third more.

After a couple of miles had been traversed, this Indian four I a half-worn moccasin upon the trail, where it had evidently been dropped by its owner, who did not think it of sufficient importance to stop for during the race. One glunce tell i im that it belonged to a Sloux brave, and a fierce gleam of vin listive joy swept athwart his dusky visage as he noted this. For to siles being hereditary enemies, he had particularly litter cause for hatred toward the band or division of the Doc tal, tribe known as the "Burnt Wood Tetons."

Placking a dried weed, he stuck one end of it into the grand, then placing the moccasin upon the other, continued his loge along the plainly-defined trail.

Sarrly afterward they reached the point where the fugitives had been overtaken, and the trail turned abruptly toward the north-cast. Toulmin's eyes glistened with joy as he noted the slow pice that the Sioux had fallen into, for he knew that unless this had been specifily changed, his chances for overtaking them her remight were very fair. And once within view, he had little fears for the rest.

They role rapilly on until nearly noon, and began to think of facility some place where they could get water for the largest well as grass, when they saw the head scout coming the art them on a keen run, but cronching almost on a level with the tall grass, and motioning them back. Toulmin ordered a halt, and then awaited the approach of the trail-hunter.

Here is as he met the second scout, and after a few hasty were, sent him wheal to the top of the high ground, where he is a lown amil the grass, apparently acting as lookent in the limit in the band had been heading.

"Well, Metargoo, what have you seen that has so bell surely asked below him.

"No state; g'al a Leap," uttered the Cheyenne, then continued in his own tongue, which the outlaw leader was most ter of.

"Meritapin has seen the camp of the Sioux. They are fais; they suck their heads in the bushes, and then they are hid, like the rattlesnake. Their scalps are ready for my white brother. He has but to stretch out his hands and take them."

203

"Confound your roundabout talk; can't you speak so a body can tell what you have found out without beating round the bush an hour?" anguily cried Toulmin.

"A cloud is over the white chief's eyes. Metarapoo will brush it away," retorted the Cheyenne chief. "Over yender hill, three miles distant, stands a motte upon the banks of a creek. In that wood a band of red-men are encamped. They number seven hands and four fingers," he rapidly stated.

"But how do you know they are the men we are after?" asked the captain.

"Metarapoo is a Cheyenne. He has eyes and is not blind like the rat with wings. Does he not know the horse he has raised from a colt? The horse stole by the man of night is there. Is the chief satisfied?" haughtily replied the say ge.

"Let the great chief shut his ears to the hot words spoken by his friends," apologized Toulmin. "The White Bear was wrong. Let Metarapoo tell him how to act," he added, for he was desirous of mollifying the Cheyenne, who, he know, could be a bitter and dangerous enemy if he willed it.

The chief was highly gratitied, and expressed his views as to the best course to pursue. The band was to retreat, it is their trail covered as well as possible until they had reached a deep ravine at some little distance in the rear. Here they were to wait, while guards were posted on every side, up a the highest ground available, to announce the approach of any person, and to keep a good watch upon the notte where the Sioux were encamped.

Then he would advance as near as possible, under cover of the tall grass, and learn whether they centemplated removing, or remaining where they were, if this could be done.

As soon as night fell, he would enter the mette, and if pessible liberate the bends of the two captives, so that they could flee at the first alarm; for unless they did so, the first act of the Sioux would be to tomahawk them at once, rather than run the risk of having them recaptured.

Gale had passed a most uncomfortable night after his fatile attempt at escape. He was bound until he could move neither hand nor foot, and the bends were drawn so tightly that he sufficed intense pain. The circulation of blood being stopped, his the shall swollen until the cords were buried deep in his legs and arms, while his teet had been placed higher than his head, as if to add to his torture.

When dry dawned and the savages awoke, the captives expected they would be conveyed to the village of the Sioux, but during the morning meal Gale learned that the party were not going to resume their journey. That they intended waiting where they were until the arrival of another band belonging to the party, who were expected at this point, the applicable laced ten leavous, some time during the day.

This fact he communicated to Jessie, and they hailed with dight the brief respite thus obtained. For they knew their face weall not be determined until the entire band was collected, even if they were not spared until the village was reached, in order that all might enjoy the sport.

The day passed dreadly enough, but the expected band did not arrive. The Sioux began to grow uneasy, but after some discussion concluded to remain at the notes until morning, when, if their comrades did not arrive, they would make the best of their way to the village.

After support the captives were secured beneath a tree at a little distance from the fires, as they had been the preceding night. A guard was set over the horses; then the remainder stretched out around the dying embers, where they soon fell asl p.

Mi inight came. Gale's quick senses, all alive, then distinctly heard his name whispered from behind the tree to which he was bound. He gave a low hiss in reply, when he felt a sharp thate sever the thongs that bound his arms. A hand then classed his and left in his grasp the knife, while a guttural voice whispered:

"When hear shoot come, den take squaw an' run."

Remark down, he severed the cords that bound his feet, and then continued arousing Jessie, he told her what had occurred. Then they awaited in painful suspense for the dénouement.

When Medicapped had liberated Gale, he glided from the timber, represing the dozing horse-guards in safety, and when he was out of ear-shot hastened at the top of his speed to where the Road Agents had halted, and in a few words told Toulmin what he had accomplished. Then the band cautiously approached, and when near the motte, Metarapoo and his two brother scouts crawled forward to dispose of the two somnolent sentinels.

This was done, but, writhing from the hand that clutched his throat, the guard uttered a faint death-yell, that partially aroused the sleeping Sioux. As they leaped to their feet, Gale did the same, and catching hold of Jessie's hand, darted out through the timber onto the open prairie. But they were soon, and the savages bounded after them with frightful yells and hoots.

The disguised scout ran full among a body of horsemen that were approaching, and fearful lest they should mistake them for enemies, shouted out his name and that of the maiden. A man leaped from his horse, and knocking Gale down with a clubbed pistol, seized Jessie and told one of his men to take her out of harm's way. Then remounting, Toulmin dashed into the thickest of the fray, for the two bands had come into collision.

And then followed one of those scenes of deadly strife, short and thrilling, in which the rival races, the red-men and the white, were pitted against each other, where circumvention and subtlety are laid aside for mere brute force.

The ritles and guns were thrown aside after the first volley, and then the sharp detonation of revolvers answered the twang of bow-strings, while those on foot met hand to hand with steel clashing against steel. It seemed as though pandemonium had broken loose and that fiends met demons in deally strife, so wild and unearthly was the din.

Gale soon recovered his senses, and glancing around saw that the Road Agents must speedily prove victorious. He now knew who his rescuers were, and that his fate would be none the less certain in their hands than in the scarcely more to be dreaded Sioux. But he would not flee and about on Jessie; it was not his way of doing things.

Then his gaze fell upon the man who had been given charge of the young girl, and who had refired to a little distance from the scene of strife. He was seated upon a horse, helling Jessie before him, prepared for instant flight should fate declare itself against his comrades. Gale still retained the knife that had been left with him by Metarapoo when the latter had severed his bonds.

Dropping down in the triendly grass he rapidly glided in a last circle around the outlaw, so as to gain his rear unsuspected. This was the work of but a few moments, and really he had no time to lese, for the Sloux were rapidly becoming demorable last rethe overpowering force and superior weapons of the Agents.

Gabe shortly arose directly behind the horseman, and with a pather-like bound, grasped him by the throat and plunged the keen blade deep in his breast. He did not even utter a man, the blow was so sure and deadly, but as the guide withdrew the knith from the wound, the hot life blood sprinkled Jessle's face, and not knowing the real state of affairs she uttered a long, piercing scream.

Drepping the corpse that he supported, Gale leaped upon the horse, and digging his locals into the flunks of the startled and it, they be made law by over the prairie from the scene of the his haven reasoned Jessie, and hope returned to her likest. But this was soon dissipated, for Zene hissed a bitter imprecation through his teeth and urged their horse to greater specific A hourse shout of rage, and then the quick trampling of he is tehind them told they were discovered and that nothing but the speed of their horse could save them from recapture.

In fict, the unfortunate shrick of Jessie had reached the ears of the orthogolead r, and he turned just in time to see the regro, as he still supposed Gale to be, leap up behind the main had dush over the rise in the prairie. With a ficree oath he spurred after them.

The most, now near its fall, shed a bright, silvery sheen ever the surrounding objects, and by its light Toulmin had no dill sty in he ping on the trail of the fugitives. He perthe liwith a fines, vindictive joy, that he was rapidly overthe light many and replaced the discharged chambers of his revive with a first cylinder. The cold, steel-like glatter in his time eyes tell that the disguised scout would receive but slight mercy, were he overtaken. The doubly-laden horse responded nobly to the voice Gale, but he was overmatched, and slowly but surely losin his vantage-ground. Toulmin was long since within range, but he feared to risk a shot lest he should injure Jessie.

But it fast grew to a climax, this unequal race, and after a few more bounds the outlaw* leveled his pistol, and, at the crack, Zenas Gale recked in his seat mortally wounded. Still his indomitable spirit did not quail. Sharply turning his horse's head, he cast, with his last dying effort, the heavy knife full at his murderer. Toulmin evaded it by swaying to one side, and even as the guide fell from his horse, he fired another shot at his victim. But it did no further harm. It could not; the scout was dead, with his finger upon the trigger.

When Toulmin was fully satisfied of this fact, he caught the horse by the bridle, and raising Jessie to the sa blie, turned and led the way back to the motte, where his men had proved victorious, as the wild, hourse shouts proclaimed.

CHAPTER X.

THE DEATH-DOOM.

WHEN Hank Triplett was fully satisfied that Le had distanced the pursuing Agents, and not fearing their trailing him by the faint, hazy light of the moon, he returned to the hills by making a wide ditour so as to avoid the outlies should they have scattered during the chase. Once among the hills, he soon found a snug covert for both the horse and himself.

His reasons for this course were twofold. He knew that the pirates would not be likely to suspect him of az in venturing near their retreat so soon after his narrow escape. And then the only cover! near the "Three Mounds" was the next so often mentioned, and was the only spot where a man and horse could lie concealed unless they took to the hills. The prairie island was now out of the question, and as he wished to join the party under Wyvil Moss as soon as possible after the signal was given. Hank had thus doubled on his trail.

He did not wish to go direct to the Mounds, lest they should be a make I in the morning and his trail betray the fact of his remaining in the neighborhood. Then such a watch would be kept up that of a surety the rescuing party would be discovered on its first approach, and thus render their object futule. For he knew from Zone Gale's description of the place will disposition of the outlaws, that mere force could not reduce the place without fearful loss of life, but that they must disposition stratagem for success.

Hank at length fell into a sound sleep, that lasted until after the sun had risen. After attending to the horses and cating a cold bite himself, Hank sallied out to seek a point where he could both overlook the stronghold and Briggs' Knob.

This he succeeded in doing without discovery, and to his joy saw that there were no signs of life around the cave, thus standing that the inmutes had no idea of his having returned to the vicinity. His vigil received no reward until late in the nft rules, when he saw a thin column of smoke rise from the summit of the Kuch, and he knew that at least Wyvil Moss had arrived. Regully gliding to the covert of the horses, he samed by a result out way to the Mound.

When within a short distance of the rendezvous, he disn. in I have and crawled along until he had a fair view of the vality that by between the Mounds. To his delight he saw over three-score horses feeding at ease upon the tall grass that reached their counters. He could see by their housings that they belonged to soldiers.

As leaving lines view, a hourse challenge to halt met his er, and halt out of man surrounded him. He glanced around, and a sering Wyvil Moss, asked where he was, speaking to a young lientenant.

M. ... he wise the voice, came forward. He had sadly characteristic the formight since Je sie's abduction, and was let the shall a of the pale, handsome man we first knew. Det his face lit up now, and he strove to question Hank regardler his child, but he could not. The words choked him, and he could not speak.

"It's all right, squire, leastways I consait it is. The galMiss Jessie, I mean—got cl'ar o' the imps as hed her, an' started fer the settlemints wi' Zene Gale, an' I reckon she's safe by this time."

"Why—how was it, old friend?--tell me all, quick," cried Moss, in a husky whisper, as he sunk down upon the grass, too faint to stand erect.

And Triplett, after he imitated the bereaved father, narrated, slowly and succinetly, the events, so far as he was conversant with them, that we have described.

"Yes," he added, "the white-skinned nigger is arter'em like a thousan' o' bricks, but 'less somethin' onusual lappired, they're safe long ago. They had too big a start to be grupped in a fa'r tail on cend chase, an' thet we'll s'pese they had.

- "If so, they is sife, but the lad, Spencer, hain't, not by a jugful, an' 'less we help 'im out o' the scrape, he'll go under when thet corn-switched varmint gits back, shore. An' he's too peart a lad to be saved sech a way. 'Sides, you must 'member he got trapped when he war tryin' to seve your orter. An' so it's no more'n right you shed gi'n 'im a litt, 's, icially as it's easy did. We can raise the whole calcodie o' them fellers jest like mice, an' I move we do it," added Hank, emphatically.
 - "But Jessie-my daughter-" began Moss,
- "Ef she got cl'ar o' those fellers as war arter her, she's safe, shore; an' ef she d'aln't, don't ye see they'll fotch her back hyar ag'in? While ef we start arter 'em, we may noi s'em on the road; an' once let the whole band git inside o' the cave, an' we'd need a whole rij'ment o' sojers to take 'em. Don't ye see? But of we take these few fast, an' then by low for t'others when they come back, why we can begine lot, jest as easy."

"I believe you are right, Triplett, and I agree to what you say. And now, tell me your plans, or rather the details of them, as what we do must be done quickly."

The reason of his long delay was simply because he could find no person who could guide him to the points designated by Gale, for a long time; but at length this was done, and they had just arrived and dispatched the guide to light the signal.

All this confidensumed time, but that was immaterial, as Hark the right it best not to attempt taking the robbers' strong-hall mail near milnight, when they would be considered by unit rathe influence of liquor, and the task thus rendered so much easier and less dangerous.

But at length he gave the word, and the party started on their peritors mission. Hank had selected the man who had guided the soldiers thither as the one to accompany him when he attempted the task of silencing the guards.

Tais was a mildle-aged trapper of herculean build, brave to a facit, but at the same time prudent and wary. Ralph Notice had been one of his old chums when he had followed the pursuit of trapping, and they had tested each other's conrage and skill in a thousand different dangers. They "worked well in double harness," as the phrase runs.

They quickly reached the entrance to the defile, and Hank a lyunce I to reconnoiter, so that the alarm might not be given, and their plans frustrated by any restive outline who might be cooling his heated blood in the fresh night-air.

When the band was reached, the two scouts advanced alone, and when they caught sight of the large bowlder that barred the way, they perised and sounded the necessary signals, which were promptly replied to, and the door swung open, thus revealing the entrance to the cavern.

Though their hearts beat somewhat quicker, the nerves of the seconds were like steel. It was no common task they had under then, for should their calculations err, should there be more than two men on guard, the alarm would probably be given, at I then it would be heard to hand without the advantage of a complete surprise, while the bandits, knowing every nook and or may in the cave, might take up such a position as would encount in the cave, might take up such a position as would encount in the cave.

Sta were the theory its of all, but the guides did not falter, or I regular alvanced to the entrance. There was no light save that of the moon, and they were slouched hats pulled lown to their eyes, so that nothing but the mass of hair that sur all I the lower part of their faces could be seen. They cut red the cave, and one of the men said:

"Where did you drop from, Jim; has the captain got back?" Hank saw the outlaw's mistake and replied in a gruff tone, coughing as if he had a bad cold, the more effectually to dis guise his voice.

- "He'll be along purty soon. I came on ahead a little."
- " Did he cotch the girl and the nigger?"
- "Yas; got them all hunky. But who is here with you?" asked Hank, anxiously, dreading lest the reply should dash his hopes to the ground.
- "Only Henshaw. Where are you Hen? Come up and hear the news."

By this time the two scouts had become partially accustomed to the darkness that was slightly broken by the moonlight streaming in at several loopholes near the ceiling. It was not clear enough to enable them to distinguish features, while they could but imperfectly make out the dim, shadow-like forms of the Road Agents. There was sufficient, however, and as Henshaw slowly approached, stretching himself and yawning terribly, as though just awakened from a sound nap, Triplett muttered to Norton:

"Take him, pard. This 'ne's my meat!" at the same time clutching the astonished outlaw by the throat with both han 's and pressing him back to the ground they fell heavily, the scout uppermost with his knee on the Agent's breast.

The man strove to give the alarm, but the iron grasp of the old borderer was sure, and he gave but a convolvive gurgle. For a few moments Hank continued the pressure, then removing his right hand he drew his knife and planted it in the buildt's heart. A facble gasp, a convulvive quiver, and the Road Agent was dead.

Ralph Norton was equally as successful, for the man called Henshaw was more than half asleep, and offered no resistance to his huge adversary, who broke his neck with one vigorous twist, then sheathed his long blade in the senseless care as:

They listened intently to see if the slight note of the senffle had abruned the outlaws, but all was still save new and then a frint sound of laughter, or the crash of glass, as a lottle or goblet was thrown upon the rocky floor and shivered to pieces.

Telling Norton to remain where he was and to allow no one egress or ingress, Triplett cautiously advanced in the direction of the revelry. In a few moments he had reached a point from whence he could see into the apartment where the chaile much by he can enacted on the first evening of Jessie Moss' arrival.

Kell g without the circle of light, he saw with pleasure that their work was fall done, whisky being the friendly agent. An incorrect the outlaws, both white and red, were lying under the tall for upon the pile of furs, while the remainder were note or less under the influence of the same insidious foe.

Having car fully noted their number and disposition, Hank that I and rapidly made his way back to the band of soldiers, this are what had been done. Directories, their horses were secured to the projecting rocks.

Challe is given to follow noiselessly in his footsteps, the gelled latter way into the cave, and in a few moments the entre but I were disposed in two ranks, the front one kneeling, while these in the rear simed over their heads, across the wide passed that hel into the room where the outlaws were all congregated.

The solution is less of the doom that was threatening them as they kept up their ergies, and the dinincrecised as the liquor these is more the 'y. They were most of them unarmed, and only weapons were ranged along the wall behind them, and could be quickly grasped.

Each man singled out his mark, and over three score firearms were leveled at the unconscious outlaws within close range. Then came loud and clear the order:

"Fayne.

At litest was the list sound that the majority of the robtistical upon this earth. They deserved no mercy and this policy linear. They were shot down like wolves.

Be a fin in br I all of "Wolf-E, e," the lieutenant of the graph is last deficient weapons, and being near the further end of the rank they the before the smoke had risen. They were some just as they entered a room that was partially closed in by a large rock so arrange has to turn upon a pivot, and then fished firm within by several we lge-shaped rocks. When this swang into place, there was only a long, narrow aperture between its top edge and the ceiling overhead that came down in a long ridge to within four feet of the floor. The hole was small, not over ten feet square, and those within could perfectly screen themselves by lying flat on the floor, while any person trying to obtain a view of them would have to expose his own person to their aim. There was no elevation within the cave from whence a shot could be delivered with success.

The soldiers, excited by the burning of gunpowder, reclaim impetuously at this barrier, for they did not know the real their of the case and supposed that the outlaws had continued their flight. But they were soon undeceived, to their cost. As they reached the stone, several of them thurst their heads through the aperture to learn the best mode of moving the rock. It was a foolbarly action, and carried its own punishment along with it. All was dark within and they saw nothing.

Then the crash of five rifles came and belched their contents in the crowd, so close that the powder singed the faces of the unfortunate soldiers, five of whom fell dead with their heads literally dashed to pieces. The noise of the discharge was deafening within the close walls, and the echoes rolled from point to point throughout the cavern.

The comrades of the dead men stood aghast, their death was so sudden and unexpected. They were about rushing in a body to avenge their fate, but their leader ordered them back, for he saw by the lamplight how vain it would be to storm the retreat under the present circumstances. He knew that it could not be done without fearful loss of life, and he knew that all his forces would be needed to cope with the main body under Toulmin, and to reach the fort in safety afterward.

Norton was standing behind a ledge, his rifle leveled at I elbow resting upon the rock. He was confident that an eller volley would be fired, and mentally vowed that it should be the last one for at least one of the robbers. He had warned his comrades of the danger they were in, and most of them had sought cover, but occasionally one would expose himself thoughtlessly, although so far no harm had been done.

The outlaws, by keeping back from the opening could overlook the entire area before the loophole without danger of being seen, and could thus secure a good aim upon any one who exposed timself in moving to and fro. The old trapper know this, and that, by firing at the flash, he would "save" his math. He had not long to wait, for as a soldier more to exposed himself a ritle-ball from the fort pierced his brain But, like an echo, Ralph's rifle was discharged, the sound of a long to the gun as it struck the rocks, this pointly that it had performed its duty well. Then all we sill now when the reverberation had died away.

The rich locked at each other with the same question in the research locked at each other with the same question in the research. It was easily read; how should they remove this an explicit of same from their path? But it was not so easily the whole apartment, as well as the entrance to it from the outer world. Thus, did a man enter or pass through the outer room, it would be at the risk of receiving a compliment in the shape of a ragged bullet.

Ralph Norton, after his successful shot, had reloaded his rifle, and stood in readiness should another robber try his luck. Hank Triplett had glided from the room, and after being absent a short time returned, bearing a huge armful of dry wood. This he held in such a manner that only his hands and feet were exposed, and he reached his covert in safety. When here he deliberately started a fire, and feeding it carefully, soon had the ends of the sticks in a brisk blaze. Then he called out if r a dezen men to be sent back to the entrance to keep watch in the defile, lest they should be surprised in their turn. For by this time the entire band had gathered around the one room.

To cover this movement, Lieutenant Frayne ordered his monto keep up a brisk fire upon the crevice so as to prevent the cuthous firing another volley. This plan proved successful, and the detailed men withdrew from the spot in safety.

Hank directed that the fasilade should be kept up, only one man to fire at a time, but with no perceptible interval between while he carried out his plans for roasting out the Road Aprits. Slizing a couple of the blazing brands, he ran noiseless'y firward, and crouching beneath the loophole, he thrust them through the aperture.

A cry of pain and rage followed his experiment, and told that the fary shower had fallen full upon the outlaws as they crouched to the floor to avoid the bullets that pattered spainst the stone sides, falling in a shower at their feet, flatened by the concussion. They were so surprised that one of them must have leaped to his feet and been struck by a bullet, for a deep groun of agony was heard, then once more all was still.

Presently the firing was resumed to allow Triplett a chance to continue his work. This was soon completed, and the interior of the little room was fully lighted up, so should one of the inmates arise to his feet he could plainly be seen. The brands were kicked about, but the wood was dry as timer, and could not easily be quenched; the coals still glowed, and their quarters must have become uncomfortably warm, for the concealed robbers were heard growling and cursing with rage. After a while, Hank raised his voice and hailed them:

"Say, ye feliers in thar, don't ye think ye'd better gi'n up? Tain't no manner o' use ye foolin' any longer, 'case we've got the dead wood on ye, this pop."

Their reply, still definit, was a politely-worded direction for the entire party to hasten forthwith to a certain remote region, nameless to polite ears, where, if legends are to be believed, they would find the weather warm enough to dispense with an overcoat. But it is, perhaps, needless to state that they respectfully declined the invitation, doubtless thinking they would see enough of the Road Agents in this upper sphere.

"Wal, we hain't overly pertick'ler, but 'less ye come out o' that in less than ten minutes, why, we'll try what vartue that is in powder. That's plenty a-hangin' up round hyar. What'd ye think the consequince'ud be, a-throwin' a full hern in that, of the stepper were pulled out? We'll do it fer shore, 'less ye gi'n up."

There was no immediate reply to this, but they could hear the outlaws in earnest consultation, evidently startled by the significant threat. They had no doubt that it would be unhesitatingly fulfilled; if so, there could be but one ending. Presently Eyre spoke:

"Well, what terms do you offer?—what will be our treatment if we surrender?"

"Inh! what do you take us for? Come out, and we will talk afterward," replied Frayne.

"I'll tell you where your friends are confined, if you will give me a fair clance to wipe out the man that killed my can here. The one that answered our shot, I mean. If you say 10, then come and take us, and the prisoners may rot where they are. You might hunt a year, and not find them then. I only ask a fair hand-to-hand fight with the fellow. Then you may do as you please," cried out Wolf-Eye.

Fray no was about to contemptuously refuse this, when Norton laughed.

I have a't had a real up-and-down spat for some time, and if he gets the better of me, why, he'll carn the honor, that's all."

"But you don't know who or what he is!" protested

Frayne.

What diff rence? Do I look like a man who stops to count up whether the chances are all for me or not? If he gas tabled out, why, there is one the less to guard back to Leavenworth."

"It's all right, mister man. Jest throw out y'ur weepons, un't be of a the door. Ye won't be hurt till the time comes," called out Hank, cheerily.

Atter a little delay this was done, and the three surviving callins staged by hilly out into the larger room. The two were exiles arely bound, and in reply to their questions regarding their fate, were told that they would be handed over to the military commander of the western department, to be that with as he might determine.

CHAPTER XI.

THE CLOSING SCENE.

When Wolfe-Eye was confronted with the man he had so boldly challenged to mortal combat, he could not restrain a glance of admiration for the magnificent physique of the trapper as he leisurely stripped for the duel. And it was no wonder, for you would have to search long and far before you could find his equal.

Ralph Norton was well known all over the Far West, and you may yet hear him alluded to in terms of general respect, for I am now describing a man who really existed at the time and region in question; not a mere fancy character. Many are now living who can remember him and relate the story of his life and death, and beer testimony to the truthfulness and accuracy of the description given.

He stood six feet two and one-half inches in his moccasins; measured twenty-seven inches across his shoulders, with an enormous girth of chest. He had handsome, clearly-cut features, and a deep, yet ringing voice, and having in his youth received a good education, his language was correct, and he possessed few of the rough actions and habits common to his class and profession. He was will and terrible when angered, but a triend ever found him kind and gentle as a woman. An uncring shot, trustworthy guide and scout, swift of foot and nearly as tireless as a wolf; an unsurpassed horsonen; Ralph Norton was the model of a genuine mountain man.

In preparing for the duel, he stripped to the waist, thus reverding fully the magnificent play of the large, steel-like muscles, and contour of his chest and shoulders. His hands were small, but his arms like pisten-rods, which, while where, scemed of the consistency of sole-leather. And although so large, there was no superfluous flesh about him. With a handkerchief bound tightly around his forehead to hold back the long hair, as well as to absorb the perspiration, and a long, well-tested knife in his hand, he announced himself as being ready.

The online was not much over the medium hight, and rather side for, appearing but a stripling by the side of his har antegonist. But, in fighting parlance, he "stripped large." His form was round and full, especially so about the case, while his supple waist and long, muscular thighs detected great activity. His dark skin, very hairy, had a bronzed there that told the splen lid condition he was in. His arms were unusquily long and the muscles knotted and writhed as he have I them. He fully appreciated his antagonist, but did not seem to fear for the result.

The were but two besides himself who did not deem it worse than it by for him to cope with Norton, and these were the latter and old Hank. They knew that Wolfe-Eye would have hims if worthy any forman's steel.

When the two stood up and faced each other, all held their lieth. If Norton neight be compared to a foll-grown lion in is prime. Here each with no less propriety be likened to the line, showy timer. And the position he assumed further carried out the semblance.

His re mel, agile form was bent forward like a panther preperiog to sping, the muscles of his bairy chest and arms werking and clawling like snakes. His small black eyes shore and speakled with a serpent-like gleam, while his long, In hea-like hair hung damp-like around his face and shoulders.

Note a steel in an attitude of careless grace, and a casual of ever would have pronounced him a novice in the use of the trible we pen he held loosely in his right hand, which has a list saly by his side. But to his commade and chum, Hand Triplett, who well knew his skill in that weapon, the case looked different.

Approximated his antagonist.

For a money that they shoot thus, then, with a wild yell that thrilled the spectroes, Wolf-Eye bounded forward and made a venomous thrust at Rulph. Quick as the assault was, it was met by the latter, whose blade parried the stroke, while his left hand shot out like a battering ram, and alighted full upon the temple of the outlaw, felling him like an ox in the shambles. Had he followed up his advantage, as he was entitled to by the laws of the position, the duel would have been ended almost ere it had begun. But he again stood silent in the same attitude, until his foe arose, and once more advanced, with the blood streaming from his forchead, and a bewildered look upon his features at the unlooked-for tactics of his adversary.

"Are you ready?" inquired Norton.

"Yes, curse you!" hissed Eyre.

"Then guar I yourself!" cried Ralph, springing forward, and the knives met with a clash that cast a tiny shower of spacks from their tried blades.

It was a scene that beggars description. The movements and changes were so rapid and varied, the storm of blows and thrusts so unceasing, that it seemed a miracle that a man could exist for a moment before it. The blades met and gritted together, the spatks fell on every side; a muttered ingrecation is heard as the keen steel severs the sensitive flesh, and now the steel gleans with a dull, red glow in the lamplight, while the ruby life-drops sprinkle the rocky, uneven floor.

The combitants plust for a moment, then again renew the strife. But the pluse is long enough to note the bleeding forms of the duelists—to see that the end is near.

And yet, at this period, one sollier turned to his neighbor, and in a nonchalant tone, asked him for a chew of tolacco; adding, that he wished they would harry up, as he was too tired and sleepy to stay fooling away the time like that!

Now the twain clinch and struggle for the fall, their hoored breathing sounding painfully distinct; Eyre's activity counterbalancing the superior strength of the trapper. Then they both sink side by side, and lie moderales for a brief space.

A general movement toward them is checked by the resumed struggle, and the spectators retain their positions. Over the blood-stained ground they roll, still plying their blodes in feeble strokes, but with unablated ferocity. The hearts of those around sickened and turned faint at the horrible sight, yet they dated not interfere. But the end was night.

As Norton made a fierce lange at Wolf Eye, the latter glided from unior his antogodist, and the knife was shivered against their ckyther. Then the gory blade of the outlaw was driven once, from, to the bilt, into the breast of the trapper.

The he are so, and then is blood-stained weapon the weapon the his head, such lit less to the ground, with a wild whoop of vicing still Bararing on his lips.

Haikr sind frward and endeavored to restore Norton, but all was in vain. He never spoke again, and died within five minutes of his foe.

Take polished the great hearted Ralph Norton, loved by his file a is and respect deven by his enemies. He may have had erron who among us has not?—but he never did a willfally with a lact in his life. Calmly and peacefully his spirit passed away, with his hap I still pressing that of the rough old guide whom had had loved so dearly, and whose hot, scalding tears diepped test upon the pole, dead face.

One of the prisoners offered to lead the way to where Spenor was confined, which he did, and in a few minutes the party returned, which by two men, one of them Spencer, and the other-?

Wyvil Messand Triplett uttered the same name in wondermont. How had he returned? It was Toulmin, the outlaw had related so pair, a ghastly, that they could searcely believe that they.

Then he spoke:

Park name, westlemen, if I tell you you are greatly mistake. You taink I am the leader of the land you have just be an up; and I don't blame you. But you mistake. I am Hat Todon'n, a captain in the —the regulars, as I hope to paried you here. I may know him."

Jest then France came up and greeted the prisoner warmly.

story in a few rapid words.

If up we is held if it Leevenworth, with all the papers necessary to prove the traffic of what he had asserted, and on the west and the papers necessary to prove the traffic of what he had asserted, and on the west and the papers necessary to prove the traffic of what he had asserted, and on the papers necessary to prove the papers necessary to papers necessary to

They were led by a man who so greatly resemble I him, both in size, shape and features, that even the men remarked upon the likeness. This person, whom he heard called Captain Moore, possessed himself of the money and papers that he had upon his person.

Then he was bound on his horse and conveyed along with them until they halted for the night. While suppor was being prepared, the head outlaw amused himself by reading the papers, and the entries in a small pocket diary, in a compartment of which was the portrait of Jessie Moss.

When Moore saw this he seemed highly excited, and then more closely examined him, and by the aid of a pocket mirror, satisfied himself of the great resemblance. The picture and papers were carefully secured upon his person.

On the next day Toulmin was conveyed to the cavern, where he had been a close prisoner ever since. That he had been nearly starved to death and kept bound hand and foot the entire time, excepting when cating the one scarty meal they allowed him each day. That these were the first steps he had taken for over a fortnight.

Wyvil Moss was now convinced that he had done Toulmin great injustice, though only in thought, and asked his pardon.

This, as may readily be believed, was not withheld, for Hart had a vision before his mind's eye, of a beauteous girl, who called the apologist father.

"It was not your fault, my dear sir. The resemblance would have deceived anybody who had not known me longer than you had," and the two men shook hands cordially.

Lieutenant Frayne now called the roll, and the casualties on the side of the soldiers were summed up. It was very small in proportion to that of the Road Agents. The sudden on-laught was so deadly that but few of the outlaws offered any resistance, being so greatly outnumbered.

Besides the six men killed by those led by Wolf-Eye, three were killed and five wounded. Then there was Ralph Norton.

They had taken but seven prisoners in all, most of them being more or less severely wounded. Their hurts were at tended to after those of the soldiers, and made as comfortable as possible under the circumstances.

Thus the right place I away, and daylight returned without any tidings of the outlaws maker Moore (as we shall now call him, and M sagner anxions at the long delay.

Helines in a late ther Jessie was alive, or lying cold and dead in a me late retreat. Or sile might even then be safely at him and conjecturing a though the analysis of plan liting his return, and conjecturing a though the late.

sand evils, just as he was doing.

It may not all the combined reasoning of Hank Triplett and the two years men, who were convinced by the old gives begin, to charge his resolve of starting for Ireton forthwith. But at lastic he gave a reluctant consent to their plans.

Heli, asise ley a comple of solders, dug a grave for his interaction of the hills, where the grass was first and grave, we could by a be autiful spring of clear, such a term of lafter he was lowered into his last restingth a min of this caph, a short but tervent prayer was offered up by Wyvil Mass, respected to by the entire band.

At This but's request, Spiner curved the trapper's name and the of his death upon a board found in the cave, then all lift "A FAITHFUL FIREND, AN HONEST FOR; HE WAS A GOOD MAN AND A THIRD." This was placed at the head of the large of his large of the seen as late as the fall of 1865, and for angul we know to the contrary, may be there still.

a. In Figure 2 to a compact the greater part of the day, and a in Figure 2 to a compact of the day, and it was do the but that was a like but that was a like but that was a like the process in fir the settlements at early dawn.

Hark and High were on guard at the entrance, and a sold richt that a company, who was to alarm the main band in commany or shall appear. It was nearly midnight and the man a shining very hightly, when the quick tramp of any late part of the sentinels, and they have that their game was appreaching through the narrow of the

The alarm we served and preparations made for their fittice received. Mest of the party had been stationed in the desir entrance or help of the main clamber. Their plans were to size reistingly these who first entered, so as not to alarm the others who high the more dilatory. For this purpose each man had a heavy blanket or robe, taken from the store of the robbers, to fling over their heads, and thus stifle their cries. When discovery came, as it must sooner or later, they were to use their weapons and show no mercy to any who offered resistance.

The signal was given loud and clear, and the door opened by Triplett, who whispered to Floyd, in exultant tones:

"Right, by hokus! They've got the gal; didn't I tell ye?" Sure enough, there was the outlaw, Captain Moore, and in his arms he supported the fainting form of Jessie Moss.

He dismounted and entered the cave, while the other Agents rode toward the lower cave to stable their horses. Luckily, Hank had foreseen this, and the horses belonging to the party of rescuers had been brought inside and secured in a distant chamber.

The outlaw leader strode into the cave without speaking, and hastened along the passage, cursing because there was not better light, only intent upon gaining a place where he could attend to the unconscious girl who had given way beneath the bitter disappointments, trials and sufferings she had undergone of late.

Then came a shrill whistle, and Hart Toulmin, with one blow of his fist, sent Moore staggering against the wall, at I clasping the maiden to his breast, then trembling with a dread fear, rushed to the lights to see if she were really dead, as he feared.

A cry of warning rung through the hall, and Tordmin quickly turned, just in time to avoid a venomous thrust aimed at him by Moore, who had only been staggered, not stunned by the blow he had received. Before any one could grasp him he had leaped forward and made the attempt on his rival's life, that had well-nigh proven successful.

Toolmin delivered another facer—Frayne was advancing with sword at a charge—and under the impetus of the blow, Moore tell back upon the keen blade, that pierced the unfortunate man's body, the guard striking against his back. He sank down with a bitter carse, and as the weapon was withdrawn, he fainted.

Just then the outlaws entered the passage, and on seeing the body of their leader lying in its gore, they uttered a cry of wonder and alarm, and while some advanced others retreated. Then came the summens to surrender, which completed their confusion.

Some legg is a morey from an unseen and unknown for, but class draw their pistels and answered it with a mingled valley of ball its and impreciations. But the soldiers, more acceptant to the glo m, dropped to the ground, and the ball it were singled at the spot from whence the voice singled, pittered harmlessly against the rocky wall over their heads.

And then the massacre began.

The who had the for the door were met by a rapid discharge from the ray lyers of the greads, and evidently thinking they were carrons of with a strong force, threw down their way as and began if a quarter. The whole thing did that one pytom minutes, and the notorious band of Neil Moore and West-Ham was broken up forever.

The pass are wearned, the wounded carefully attended to, well the bull were carried onside the cavern, where they would receive burial on the morrow.

While this was going on, Jossia Moss had been resuscitated by her fither and going to if the whole truth regarding the man shorth out to evil, and who was now anxiously awaiting without to the most his loved one, for whom he suffered so greatly.

Then Wyvil Mess come out and motioned Hait to enter, But the nesting was too sacre it for an idle pen to dwell upon, and we draw the curtain.

M -s was met by Lie stemmt Frayne, who thus addressed him:

"This man—the one who had your daughter—is sensible I'w, and wants to see either you or her. Says he can't die until he dass, but I guess he can't lift he tried," leading the way to where the captain of the Road Agents was lying.

He example the series as he heard the foctsteps, but when he saw when he have a look of pain spread over his face. Presently he spoke:

"Mr. M s. I bored no you and yours a great wrong, and it was in my heart to do you will more, but I was prevented. I suppose you have learned from Toulmin—the real captain,

I mean—that I was not the one who saved your daughter from the punther, but an impostor. I wished to explain why I have acted as I have done.

"I know I have got my death-wound, and for once I will tell the truth. I have not had a very intimate spocking acquaintance with that commodity, but at any rate I will not aie with a lie on my lips," smiling grimly, and then resuming:

"I knew and learned to love your daughter in New York, under the name of Warne McIntyre. I proposed to her, but she rejected me. I am not one to despair, and finally I found out where you lived in the summer. I made up my mind to ab lact her, when one day I halted Toulmin on the road from Leavenworth.

"You can imagine my surprise when I found he had her portrait, and was returning to lay papers before you, to prove the truth of what he had told you. This I gleaned from him, and what footing he stood upon with your family. That he was an accepted suitor, conditionally, for the hand of her I would wade through the infernal regions to gain a smile from.

"I was struck with the resemblance between him and me. Even you were deceived by it. This set me to thinking, and after weighing the matter carefully, I determined to pass myself off upon you as him, and was on my way to do so when my plans were spoiled by the appearance of that man," pointing to Floyd Spencer, "you ler, who had escaped from the war on-train that I and my men had captured.

"Then I carried her off. The rest you know. And now I tell you, as a dying man, that she is as pure and inno ent as she was before I ablue ed her. She has suffered great hardships and privations, but nothing evil," and his voice sunk to a hasky whisper, as his eyes closed in a swoon of exhaustion.

They never open ... again. The sword had performed its duty well, and the Road Agent leader died without of prayer for forgiveness, or one word of regret for the countless crimes he had committed.

Wyvil Moss turned and walked slowly away.

It was nearly noon before the imposing cavalcade filed out from the Robbers' Pass, and role over the prairie, homeward bound! With what joy did Jessie realize this fact. Going home to mother!

She forget all she had un lergone, or if she remembered, it was with a vagre, un beined sensation of horror, like one just awakened from nightmare.

What should cause her grief? There was her father beside her, her tri implicatly-vin licated lover; for although Neil Moore but not reveal I who re the stolen papers were, they had been found up a his body when it was being prepared for the grave. But sill a shalow was upon her brow.

Lover-like, Hart inquired the cause, and then she related the stary of the old guide's death—of his heroic devotion to her, when hy himself, he might easily have escaped, without being termed cowardly; but no, for her he shed his blood, and defended her even as he was dying.

Some in the same told this, and the eyes of her hearers grew that even as their hearts softened with the telling. Zermas God led an eggy form and face, but his pirit was beautiful, and that made ample amends.

while it is it in your brill nature to grieve long, and as Hart chased the shadow from her face.

They realled home in sabty, and the kind reader must please to and ting between mother and child. My pen can not paint it.

But our space is limited and our tale nearly done. As the real risks also by determined the young couple shall be married have are good the case was really so; and after a short well at ir to Chicago, they returned to Ireton, where they still live.

Hank Triplett has long since learned that the quondam old radia, Miss Maira Pinger, makes a kind wife and notable has been read at the citizen well, and when they are absent, does the same to be a dear Mr. Tripple" until he hastily graps his group of citerate a "Silver Hacks" or afoot, starts of our hadden same in the first had been and popy; for him in Act III. The gray more is the better horse," what does that prove? Echo answers—What?

Floyd Spencer finally settled down in St. Louis, where we believe he still lives, and has long since forgotten his tancy for the fair Jessie Moss that was, as indeed he should, having a fine family of six.

And thus we leave them. Au revoir.

THE END.

THE ACE OF SPADES;

OR,

IOLA, THE STREET SWEEPER.

CHAPTER L.

THE DARK ANGEL.

On the night of Settember 20th, 1852, a violent storm swept over the great city of New York. It was the beginning of the "line gain" -that storm so terrible in its nature, so destructive to hum an life along our northern rock-bound coast,

The rad, pear I in torren's upon the ever dirty streets of the Great Metroje is; the themser rolled in heavy peaks along the beaters and the lightning this hed its vivid fires over the roof-to be and in the almost described streets.

The lights floating from the windows upon the gloom of the night-1 or it was so accely nine, and the denizens of the great carry do not revire early-seemed to mock the storm that raged so terribly without.

Receives of the storm, come with us, dear reader. We will take our way-not to Fifth avenue, the abode of gilded leavery and elitish ring crime—but to Forsyth street, the le me of the sand till, the homest middle class, the pillars and

Lilarie of our Reposition

We sent the build r six stories in hight; the lights are f - i'z themevery wied w; all gives signs of occupation and et line. This is it is it bette me nt-house, each thour of which is a complete the occupants where following and small, will turn an honest penny by sub-letting a room.

We will leave the strm and gloom and enter the house. Ascontinue the sairs, we wantender the first door we come to on the landing.

We time to small killed on, illy-formished. Although winter is for elementical the is to store in the open fire-place; nothis list we dir and turnee for burning charcoal, fit only ! r preparing food.

At the plance tells us that we in the the all it and death surrounded by misery.

I had the man and the littless form of a wo-The and the pale of the pale of the pale in the man in the angle of the state of the

Dy 'mai's it. ... | we make a bale scarcely a year The China and the sale of its dead mother;

It i c.d un agh to com; when I it's look.

The little room has one other occupant, a boy some 'welve years of age; although his features—like his parent's, now lying lifeless upon the floor—being pinched by want, make him seem much older.

Daniel Catterton, the newsboy, sat in the little room, gazing wistfully upon the face of his dead mother, and wendering what would become of him and the infant that slept so calmly beside the corpse.

Daniel was fully old enough to comprehend his desolation.

"What's going to become of us?" he said, addressing his conversation to the sleeping babe. "Blest if I know," he certinued, answering his own question. "If I only had myself to look after, I wouldn't care; but that baby—ah!" and he heaved a deep sigh, as if oppressed by the weight of responsibility, "that's what gets me. * * * That gal in the front room has got lots of money; she had a roll of bills as big as my fist when I went for the rent last week. A high old music-teacher she is! S'pose I goes in an' helps myself to that roll of bills?" and at the very thought the boy glanced around nervously as if afraid of being watched. "She can get plenty more. It'll save this little kid from starving. Blest if I don't do it!" and the boy shut his teeth together armly. * * "I'll watch when she goes to bed, an' after she goes to sleep, I'll go for the roll. This little baby shan't starve while it has got a big brother."

Noiselessly the boy got up, crossed the apartment and entered the little bedroom adjoining, carrying his chair with him. From the bedroom a door led into the front room that the poer widow had furnished and let to the music-teacher. Over the door was a transom of ground glass. A corner of one of the panes had been broken, leaving a small place through which one could command a view of the front room.

Placing an empty box on his chair, the boy mounted, and putting his eye to the hele, hoked into the room.

The front room was comfortably farnished. A bright fire blazed in the cheerful open stove. By the stove stood a little crib in which slept an infant, possibly a year old. By the door stood two people, a man and woman. The man was young, probably about twenty-five, and from his dress and manner one could see that he basked in the smiles of fortune. The woman was small in face, young in years, from and beautiful in face. She was a blande, with mild blue eyes and siden, golden lair.

"Must you go now?" she asked.

"Yes, dear," he an were i, "I have to meet a friend on Broad way at a quarter past nine."

"Will you come back to-night, Loyal?"

"Yes, I'll be here about ten; I'll give you another hour before I go home," he said.

"I wish you could be with me man," she stake with a sigh.
"I am so loneseme without you. The only consolution I have is to look into Essie's face and try and detect a resemblance to yours."

"Ab, pet!" at the patted her cheek fondly; "the time will Es ne me wh n I can acknowledge you before the world."

"When will the divorce be granted?"

"Within a week, my lawyers say; then I can openly make you my wife."

"I live in constant terror now," she said, and a shade passed over her free as she spoke; "if he should return and discover my protect, he well i kill me, or worse—would tear me from you."

"There is little danger. Poor girl, you have dared all for me; never mind. I have a whole lift time to repay you in, and we'll be happy yet, as the song says."

or that any thing should be pen, so that I should have occasion to sould be given it has I do not know your address, how then can I warn you?"

"Ill give it to your-get a card?" he answered.

"There are s in a my work-basket," she said. Then she went to the toll and took a card from i'—a plain white card. On the card he waste with his pencil, "No. 810 Fitth avenue," then gave the card into her heads.

"It's hig en agel fra d zon a blosses," he said, hughing.

She is all the allers and then mechanically tunning the eard over saw that it was a playing eard, of the white-back kind so not in the by sports guiden. The eard was the accord spades.

"Signature of evil alled her soul.

"It is un early men," she said. "Spades are signs of disaster and death."

"In the transmit of that lodes a coffin; but, pshaw! that's notice. Well, good by, Caristian. I'll be back about ten.

He grant true je with us, not spules,"

As I so with a forward his upon the red lips held up so willit gly to receive it. the years man left the room. As he passed down the stairs, he also st ran over a mon-coming up; apoler the stairs it well en, and entering the street was soon lost to so it is the gloom.

In the fall, let all determines so evenly but at the first the single hair will determine the scale. The real termines the scale of the second the second and a finish of the first of the second to her a mesecuger of evil.

The box was is restrict to the land wis box, who could hear as well as so, was restrictly placed with the thought that he had all have to want till mile ght before he could make his mid on the roll of bills which was to serve for the support of the "little kid." He was about to descend from his spying position when a knock at the door brought Christine to her feet, and caused him to remain with his eye to the hole in the transom.

Christme opened the door and a man stalked into the room.

With a cry of horror the woman recoiled from him.

CHAPTER II.

THE PRINT OF THE LIGHTNING.

The stranger closed the door, turned the key in the lock, then contronted the trembling Christine, who, pale with terror, sunk almost fainting into a chair.

There was nothing in the man's appearance to excite terror. He was a stoutly-built person, probably thirty or thirty-five years old: bronzed in face and with a sailor-like lock. He was dressed neatly in dark clothes, and wore a short cloak over his shoulder.

The stranger gazed upon the trembling woman with a mournful look.

"Christine, I have found you at last," he sail, slowly.

"Oh, heaven!" she murmured, "I feared this."

"You did?" the stranger asked, and a peculi ir look shone in his dark eyes. "You feared my coming. These are bitter words for a husband to hear coming from his wife's lips. Two years ago I left you in your home at New Be liotd to be cone three years on a whaling voyage. My ship is lost and I return to my home and wife a year before my time. I return, and what do I find? Can you tell me?"

The woman did not answer, but sat like a statue, with her gaze fixed upon the carpet.

"You do not answer; then I will tell you." Oh! the tone of agony that there was in that man's voice as he uttered the simple sentence. "I found a home deserted—the marriage-vows broken, and desolation for me hereafter in this world. You were gone, Christine, fled with a villain. You left no clue by which I could follow you, but I guessed that here in this great city, the whirlpool of crime, I should find you. I came here-employed the detective officers, but the search was twoless. Then, I myself, like the red Indian, resolved to track you out. Fer a long time I have wandered up and down in this great sink of iniquity, have visited all the theaters, all places of public resort, scarching for one object only, your face. To-day I came past this house on the opposite side of the street. I saw you at the window; at last I had found you. And yet since that time, I have I can nerving myself to meet you-mying to keep down the devil in my heart that bids me to kill you."

Trembling with fright Christine sprung to her feet; a deadly terror was in her soul. She read danger in the fierce dark eyes of Walter Averill, her sailor husband.

"Hear me, Walter," she murmured, with blanched lips. "I have sinned—I know it—I am conscious of it! But no being in this world falls without a reason; then hear mine. I never loved you; my parents forced me to marry you because you were rich. You were all to me that a man should be to a woman, and yet from the hour that I stood by your side at the altar, I loathed you. It is bitter for me to speak these words, it must be bitter for you to hear them; but you must know the truth. The man that I fled with loves me—I love him, love him better than I do my own life. He is not a villain but means me well. I have applied for a divorce; in a week it will be granted; then he will make me his wife."

"His wife!" and there was menace in the tones of the sailor's voice as he spoke; "um-perhaps! What is his name?" Averill's voice was cold and calm as he asked the question.

"I will not tell you," faltered the trembling lips of the wo-

"I will find him if I have to seek him in the depths of hell!"

Christine's beart sunk within her at the threat.

Then Averill's eyes fell upon the infant sleeping in the crib.

The sailor advanced to the crib; quick as thought the mother matched the child in her arms and hugged it to her breast as though to shield it from him.

"His child?" he asked.

"Yes," she murmured, and quickly retreating to the window threw it up as if to call for assistance.

"Do not fear," he said, "I will harm neither you nor the infant; but for him, let him look to himself." The tone boded danger to the absent man.

Then the keen eyes of the sailor fell upon the card upon the table. He saw the man's handwriting, eagerly he caught it up.

"'810 Fifth avenue!' that is his address, is it not?" he cried, with a gleam in his dark eyes, approaching the almost fainting woman.

Christine strove to speak but her tongue seemed glued to the roof of her mouth; she could not articulate a word.

What was the storm raging so wildly without to the tempest in the soul of the sailor husband?

He turned the card over as if in search of further proof; the ace of spades stared him in the face.

"The omen of evil! fit it is for such a purpose. Do you see what it is?" And the sailor with the card in his hand approached the shrinking woman. He thrust the card to her till it rested on the shoulder of the babe sleeping on her breast,

Suddenly a vivid flash of lightning illuminated the room, the electric fluid darted through the window into the apartment; a terrific peal of thunder followed.

The sailor was stricken senseless to the floor. Christine stood motionless by the window like a marble statue.

The watcher at the transom stared upon the scene, his eyes dilated with horror.

In a few minutes the sailor recovered from the shock. He rose to his feet and approached the woman. She did not stir. She was dead—killed by the stroke of lightning. Its livid marks were upon her pale face. The babe still slept on its dead mother's breast. The playing-card too had disappeared, but in its place where it had fallen upon the infant's shoulder, the night-dress had been scorched and burnt away, and there on the white skin appeared in bluish tint, the ace of spades; the print of the lightning.*

Horror-stricken for a moment the sailor gazed upon the work of death.

"It is the act of Heaven!" he cried; "her crime is punished without mortal aid. The child of sin too is branded with an ineffaceable mark. Poor babe, my vengeance does not extend to you; but for him, the author of this wrong, I'll have his life although I swing for it the next moment. He may return here; for a time I'll wait."

Then taking the sleeping babe from the arms of its dead mother he placed it in its crib. The body of his erring wife, the hapless Christine, he placed upon the bed. Tears filled the eyes of the iron-willed sailor as he gazed upon the face of the woman that he had once loved with all the passion of his being.

"May her sin be pardoned hereafter," he said, with a longing look at the still face. Then he seated himself at the table.

"Now let him come; it only needs his death to complete the catalogue of horrors. The storm rages without, human passions within; it is a night fitted for bloody deeds."

For the continuation of this true and graphically startling story of Life in the Great Metropolis, see No. 10 of "The Saturday Journal," the sketch and story paper of the age, same size as the New York Ledger; Price Five Cents per copy. For sale by all Newsdealers. The "Ace of Spades" is pronounced by one of the best judges of American fiction to be "the most attractive and impressive story of New York city ife and character, plot and passion, love and hate, cunning and mystery, that has ever been written." It will only be found in the Sterling Home Weekly of pure and live literature—"The Saturday Journal," price Five Cents.

^{*} The incident of the lightning's flash printing the ACE of SPADES on the child's shoulder, is an exact reproduction of an event which happened about one year since.

BEADLE'S DIME POPULAR HAND-BOOKS.

ONE HUNDRED PAGES LIMO

DIME Book of ETIQUETTE.

For Ladies and Gentlemen: being a Guide to Truc Gentility and Good-Breeding, and a Complete Directory to the Usages and Observances of Society. Including Entrance into Society; on Dress and Ornaments; on Visits, Introductions, etc.; Entrance into Society; on Dress and Ornaments; on Visits, Introductions, etc.; Evening Parties, Dances, etc.; Games of Cards, Chess, etc.; on Conversation; on Evening Parties, Dances, etc.; Games of Cards, Chess, etc.; on Conversation; on Letter and Note Writing; how to Give and Receive Invitations; on Entertainments; on Personal Cleanliness, etc.

DIME LETTER-WRITER.

And Practical Guide to Composition. Embracing Forms, Models, Suggestions and Rules for the use of all classes on all occasions; also a List of Improper Words and Expressions, together with their correct forms. And also a Complete Dictionary of Mottoes, Phrases, Idioms, etc. By Louis Legrand, M. D.

DIME Book of VERSES.

Comprising Verses for Albums; Mottoes and Couplets; St. Valentine Verses; Bridal and Marriage Verses; Verses on Births and Infancy; Verses to send with Plowers; Verses of Love and Affection; Holiday Verses; Birthday Verses; Epilaphs and Mourning Verses; the Lover's Casket.

DIME CHESS INSTRUCTOR.

A Complete Hand-Book of Instruction, containing all that a beginner can require to guide him to the entertaining mysteries of this most interesting and fascinating of games.

DIME COOK BOOK.

Or, the Housewife's Pocket Companion. Embodying what is meet Boonomie, most Practical, most Excellent. By Mrs. M. V. Vieren.

DIME RECIPE BOOK.

A Companion to the Dime Cook Book. A Directory for the Parler, Namery, Stek Room, Toilet, Kitchen, Larder, etc. By Mas. M. V. Vioton.

DIME HOUSEWIFE'S MANUAL.

Or, Now to Keep House and Order a Home; How to Dye, Cleanse and Removate; How to Cut, Fit and Make Garments; How to Cultivate Plants and Flowers; How to Care for Birds and Household Pets, etc. A Companion to the Dime Cook and Recipe Books. By Mas. M. V. Victor.

DIME FAMILY PHYSICIAN.

And Manual for the Sick Room. With Family Diseases and their Treatment, Hints on Nursing and Rearing, Children's Complaints, Physiological Facts, Rules of Health, Recipes for preparing well-known curatives, etc., etc., based upon the authority of Drs, Warsen, Dones, Parkers, and others.

DIME DRESSMAKER.

And Milliner's Guide. A complete Manual of the art of Cutting, Pitting, and Making up the Female Wardrobe, with fall directions for Choice of Material, Bints on Reglige Toilet, Traveling Toilet, Evening Dresses, etc., Dictionary of Technical Terms, etc., etc., by Madama Pullan.

The above books for sale by all newsdealers; or sent, post-petci, to any address, on receipt of price, ten cents each.

READLE AND COMPANY Publishers, 98 William Street, New York.

BEADLE'S STANDARD DIME PUBLICATIONS.

One Hundred Pages 12mo. Ten Cents Each.

Dime Nevela.

i. Malasaka.

2. The Privateer's Oruise.

3. Myra.

4. Alles Wilds.

5. The Golden Belt.

6. Chip, the Care Child. The Regier of 76.

& Seth Jones.

D. The Slave Sculptor.

10. The Backwoods Bride. 11. Prisoner La Vintresse. 13. Bill Biddon, Trapper.

13. Cedar Swamp. 14. Emerald Necklace.

15. The Frontier Angel. 16. Uncle Ezekiel. 17. Madge Wylds.

18. Nat Todd. 19. Massacolt's Daughter.

20. Florida.

21. Sybil Chase. 22, The Mald of Esopus.

23. Winifred Winthrop. 24. The Trail Hunters. 25. The Peon Prince.

26. Brethren of the Coast. 27. Daughter of Liberty.

28. King Barnaby. 29, The Forest Spy.

30. Put Pomfret's Ward. 31. The Double Hero.

32. Irona.

33. Maum Guinea." 34. Ruth Margoria. 35. East and West.

36. Riflemen of the Miamil.

37. Godbold, the Spy. 38. The Wrong Man.

The Land Claim. 40. Unionist's Daughter."

41. The Hunter's Cabin. 42. The King's Man.

43. The Allens. 44. Agnes Falkland.

45. Esther.

46. Wreck of the Albion.

47. Tim Sumble's Charge, 1126, Old Jupe. 48. Conomon, the Ruren. 49. The Gold Hunters.

10. The Black Ship. 51. The Two Guards. 52, Single Eye.

$2, Hates and Loves 64. Myrtle.

55. Off and On. 56. Ahmo's Plot. 17. The Scout.

48. The Mad Hunter. $9. Kent, the Ranger.

60. Jo Daviess Client. $1. Langhing Eyes. 52. The Unknown.

83. The Indian Princess, 54. Rangers of Molineria.

55. The Wracker's Prince

66. The Hunter's Yow. 87. Indian Jun.

48. The Brigantine. 69. Black Hollow. The Indian Queen.

71. The Lost Trail-77. The Moose Hunter.

13. The Silver Bugle. 74. Craiser of Champenks.

18. The Hunter's Escape. 16. The Scout's Pring.

17. Quindaro, 76. The Rival Scouts. 70. Schuylkill Rangers.

80. Eagle Eye.

81. The Two Hunters. 82. The Mystic Cance.

88, The Golden Fiarpoon. 84. The Seminole Chief.

85. The Fugitives 86. Red Pluma.

87. On the Deep.

88. Captain Molly. 89. Star Eyes. 90, Cast Away.

91. The Last Cathe. 98. The Twin Scouts.

93. The Creols Sisters. 34. The Mad Skipper, M. Eph Peters.

94. Little Moccasin. 97. The Doomed Hunter.

98. Ruth Harland. 3. Overboard.

100. Karalbo. 101. Maid of Wyoming.

109. Hearts Forever. 103. Big Foot, the Guide. 104. Guilty or Not Guilty.

105. The Man in Green. 106. Simple Phil. 107. The Peddler Spy.

108, The Lost Ship. 109. Eldnapped.

110. The Hidden Home. 111, The Shawness' Foe. 112. The Falcon Hover.

113. Rattlepata. 114. Ned Starling.

115. The Sons of Liberty. 116. Port at Last.

117. The Mohegun Muiden. 113. The Water Wait.

119. The Five Champions.

120. The Hunchback. 121. Valled Benefactress. 192. Barden, the Ranger.

123. The Missing Bride. 124. Samter's Scouts.

125. The Hunted Life.

Buld Engle. 1125 The Guich Minera

129. Blackeyea.

130. Braye Heart. 1131. Wrecker's Daughter.

132. Old Honesty.

133. Yankes Eph.

134. Fool-wenther Jack, 135. The Cherokee Citlet. 136. The Indian-Hunters.

137. The Traitor Spy. (138, Tim, the Scont

139. The Border Foes. 140. Sheet-Anchor Tom. 141. The Helpless Hand.

142. The Sagamore of Saca. 143, The Swamp Scout

144. The Prairie Trappers. 145. The Mountaineer.

146. Border Sessie. 147. Maid of the Mountain.

148. Outward Bound. 149. The Hunter's Pledge.

150. The Scalp-Hunters. 151. The Two Trails.

152. The Planter Pirate. 163. Mohawk Not.

154. Rob Ruskin. 155. The White Squaw.*

156. The Quakeress Spy. 157. The indian Averger. 155. The Blue Anchor.

159, Spowbird.

160. The Swamp Rifles. 161, The Lake Rangers,

169. The Border Rivala. 163. Job Dean, Trupper. 164. The Giant Chief.

165. The Unseen Hand. 166. Red-Skin's Pledge.

167. Shadow Jack. 168. The Silent Hunter." 169. The White Cance.

170. The Border Avengera 171. The Silent Slayer. 172. Despard, the Spy. 173. The Red Coyote

174. Queen of the Woods, 175, The Prairie Rifles.

176. The Trader Spy. 177, The Pale-face Squaw. 178. The Prairie Bride.

179. The White Vulture. 180. Giant Pete, Patriot.

181. Old Kyle, the Trailer. 182. Johes Hawk. 183, The Phantom Ship.

184, The Red Rider. 185, The Dacotah Scourge 186. The Red Scalper.

187. The Outland Plot. 188. The Black Rover. 189. The Yellow Chief.

190. Phantom Horseman. 19). Red Slayer.

192. The Specter Skipper 193. The Swamp Riders. 194. Graylock, the Gulde.

195, The First Trail. 198. Eagle Plume. 197. Shuwnee Scout-

198. Burt Bunker. 199. Red Jullaw. 200. Prairle Pathfinder.

201. White Serpost. 202, Phantom Fos. 203. Misked Gulde.

204. Metamora. 205, The Gray Scalp. 206, Bucaskin Bill.

207. The Buffalo-Trapper. 205. The Ocean Outlaw.

209. Scarred Engls. 210. Redlaw, Half-Breed. ill. The Quartreen Spy.

Dime School Series.

I. American Speaker. 2. National Speaker. 3. Patriotic Speaker. 4. Comic Speaker.

5. Elecutionist. a. Himorous Speaker. 7. Standard Speaker. S. Stump Speaker.

9, Juvenile Speaker. 10. Spread-Eagle Speaker.

11. Dime Debater. DISLOQUES, NO. 1 to E. Melodist. School Melodist.

Dime Hand-Books.

1. Letter-Welter. 2. Book of Etiquette.

3. Book of Verson. 4. Book of Dreams.

8. Fortune-Teller. 6. Ludles' Letter-Writer.

I. Lovers' Casket.

Dime Game-Douga

Base-Ball Player for 1678. Curling and Skaling. Ball-room Companion. Book of Pedestrian lam. Book of Croquet. Cricket and Foot-ball. Yachting and Rowing. Riding and Driving. Guide to Swimming.

Dimo Blographica.

1. GaribaldL

Chess Instructor.

2. Daniel Boons.

& Kit Carson. 4. Anthony Wayne. 5. David Crockett.

5. Winfield Scott.

7. Pontiac. S. John C. Frespont

9. John Paul Jones. 10. Marquis de Lafayetta.

II. Tecunweh.

12, George B. McClellan. 13. Para-n Brownlow.

14 Abraham Lincola. 15. Ulysses S. Grant.

Dime Family Series.

I. Cook Book.

2. Recips Book.

3. Housewife's Manual. 4. Family Physician.

b. Dressmaking, Millinery.

Dime Song Books.

Song Books, Nos. 1 to 26. Porket Soughters, I to 6.

Miscellaneous.

DIME FACTION, I to 9. DIME LIBRARY, 1 to 6. DIME TALES, NO. 1 to 12. BOOKS OF FUEL NO. 1 to 3. House that Juck Bullt. Robinson Crosce (Hiller 4). Grant's Report. Sharman's Report.

American Tales.

SECOND RESIDES-150 BACH.

Loyal Heart.

2. The Trail Hunter. 2. Pirates of the Prairies.

d. Trappor's Daughter. 5. Pathaway. & Whitelaw.

The White Wigand. 8. Hirl, the Hunchback

The Red Warrior. Quaker Sant.

Mountain Max. Thuy end spages.

13. Redpath, the Avenger, M. Prairie-Flower.

Redpath, the Avenger. 16. Tiger-Slayer.

Bad Ralph, the Ranger. Silent Rifleman.

19. Flying Horsesons. 10. The Gold-Guide.

The Deuth Track. 23. Blue Brotherhood. 22. Alupaha, the Squaw.

94. The Border Benditz. FIRST BERIEF, NOR 7 to 44.

" Novels marked with a star are double numbers, 200 pages. Price 20 cents-For sale by all Newsdealers; or sent, Pour-Park, to any address, on receipt of price. BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers, 98 William St. N. Y.